Peter and his younger sister, Jane, were on their way to school for their CCA training sessions. Both of them were in their school badminton team. They saw Mrs Li walking towards them. Peter noticed that Mrs. Li looked tired.

Peter turned to his sister and said, "Jane, we are still early for our training session. Let us go over and help Mrs. Li with her groceries."

10

Jane looked at her brother and smiled. She always liked to help the elderly. Both of them called out to Mrs Li and went over to her.

"Let us help you with your things, Mrs Li," Peter and Jane said together.

"Thank you so much. You are both very kind and helpful," Mrs Li replied as she handed them over to the children. She now had only her handbag and umbrella with her.

15

The two children chatted warmly with Mrs Li as they took the lift up together. They were surprised to find out that Mrs Li lived only two doors away from them.

20

Mrs Li invited them in for a drink but they said that they had to go for their CCA. After saying goodbye to her, Peter and Jane then left.

The referee will declare one of them the winner.

Section D: Comprehension (OE) (10 marks)

Read the following passage carefully. Then write the answers for questions 36 to 40. (5 x 2 marks)

Peter Benchley wrote the best-selling book called "Jaws" in which a shark terrorised the swimmers. Yet Benchley, who made a fortune turning sharks into demons, is now leading a global campaign to protect sharks. Humans kill 100 million sharks yearly.

To protect the sharks, Benchley and the international conservation organisation "WildAid" are calling an immediate ban on shark finning practices, where the fin is cut off and the shark is thrown into the sea to drown or bleed to death. Benchley was appalled to witness graveyards of sharks without fins on the sea beds. 5

Demand for shark fins has soared in Southeast Asia. The soup is served at weddings and business lunches. In the past, sharks caught by fishermen were released alive, but with each fin currently worth around $15, they are now killed and the fins sold. 10

Sharks do not often attack humans. The real blame lies with the fleets of commercial boats which hunt the sharks and the lack of international regulations to protect them. Only four countries- United States, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa – have bans on fin removal. 15

"As sharks eat species that feed on fishes caught for human food, they can be seen as friends of humans," said an activist, Suzy Watts. What we know about sharks now tells us that they may not be senseless killers. Behaviour originally thought of as aggression is now seen to be simple curiosity. 20
