Harold and Jacob, both seriously ill, occupied the same hospital room. Harold had to sit up in his bed for an hour each afternoon to help drain the fluid from his lungs. His bed was next to the room's only window. Jacob had to spend all his time flat on his back. The men talked for hours sharing their life stories.

5

Every afternoon when Harold could sit up, he would pass the time by describing to Jacob all the things he could see outside the window. Each time, Jacob looked forward to spending time with Harold as the latter would describe the beautiful scenery in exquisite detail. Jacob would close his eyes and allow his imagination to take over.

10

One warm afternoon, Harold described a parade passing by. Although Jacob could not hear the band – he could see it in his mind's eye.

Days and weeks passed. One morning, the nurse found the lifeless body of Harold's. She was saddened and called the hospital attendants to take the body away.

Jacob moved next to the window. The nurse was happy to make the switch, and after making sure he was comfortable she left him alone. Slowly and painfully, he propped himself up to look outside for the first time. He strained to look out of the window beside the bed.

It faced a blank wall. The puzzled man asked the nurse what could have compelled Harold to describe such wonderful things outside the window. The nurse told him that the man had lost his sight and could not even see the wall. She said, "Perhaps he just wanted to encourage you." Upon hearing that, tears rolled down his cheeks.
