Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

Forest community

A forest is not only a collection of trees, bushes, shrubs, grasses and flowers. It is also a living community of plants and a huge variety of animals as well as microscopic creatures. More than 7000 different kinds of plants and animals live in the Beech Woods of Central Europe. This richness distinguishes forests from the plantations that humankind sometimes puts in its place.

The forests of Europe

Forests occupy about thirty percent of the total land area of Europe. Deciduous woodlands are composed of trees whose leaves fall in autumn. Bare and dark brown in winter, these forests turn green and lush in spring and change to beautiful hues of yellow and gold in autumn. However, coniferous forests are made up mainly of trees that have evergreen leaves. These forests look the same throughout the year. Each type of forest owes its appearance to the climate, soil and the influence of man and his animals.

A resource to be preserved

A forest is not simply a 'wood factory' from which timber can be removed regularly. It has a number of vital functions. In mountainous countries, forests prevent landslides and avalanches. They also help to reduce soil erosion caused by heavy rains. Everywhere, forests also provide us with life-giving oxygen. It is therefore essential that we protect forests from destruction. While we cut down timber for furniture and paper products, we must make sure that for every tree that is cut down, another is allowed to grow. In this way, the forests can go on serving us forever.

Friends and enemies

Woodland vegetation is a source of food for numerous animals, especially the hordes of insects, which attack the trees and other plants at all stages and seasons. On the other hand, the plants depend on the animal community for its continuity. The pollination of many flowers depends on the bees and other insects while the distribution of seeds is carried out by insects, rodents and birds. The greatest menace to the forest is undoubtedly humans, for they can eliminate it entirely with fire and machines. A forest can also be weakened through indiscriminate use or overuse by their animals. Overgrazing and trampling can damage flowering plants and kill seedling trees, preventing them from growing up to replace those that are felled or that died from natural causes.

For each question from 26 to 30, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Make your choice (1, 2, 3 or 4). Shade the correct oval (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet. (5 marks)

26. According to the passage, what is the main distinguishing feature between plantations and forests?
- (1) Plantations house a large collection of trees unlike forests that are composed of vegetation.
  - (2) Plantations make up thirty percent of the total land area in Europe and forests make up the remaining 70 percent.
  - (3) Plantations do not support a wide diversity of plants and animals, unlike forests.
  - (4) Plantations are man-made whereas forests are products of nature.
27. Forests that are populated with _____ remain similar in appearance throughout the year.
- (1) plantations
  - (2) vegetation
  - (3) coniferous trees
  - (4) deciduous trees

28. According to the passage, forests should be protected because they

---

- (1) provide life-giving oxygen.
- (2) occupy thirty percent of the total land area of Europe.
- (3) owe their appearance to the climate, soil and humans.
- (4) provide raw materials for the production of furniture and paper.

29. Plants owe their existence to the animal community because they

- (1) help animals to prevent soil erosion.
- (2) are a source of food for numerous animals.
- (3) prevent insects from attacking their seeds and seedlings
- (4) depend on animals to help scatter their fruits in the forest

30. What is the most violent change and/or action that could ultimately destroy a forest?

- (1) the change in climate
- (2) the occurrence of natural disasters
- (3) the use of fire and machine by humans
- (4) the overuse of the forest by woodland animals

The Mona Lisa is a famous picture by Leonardo da Vinci. The woman's smile has captured people's imagination and (31) _____ picture has been admired, copied and caricatured by many. Scientists have used the latest technology to study the picture (32) _____ closely. Ultra modern cameras have been used to digitise The Mona Lisa (33) _____ high resolution. This means they can remove layers (34) _____ protective varnish without touching the painting. Beneath the varnish, they found the real colours like red, blue, yellow (35) _____ vermilion that were used (36) _____ the great artist. Incredibly, there (37) _____ no traces of a paintbrush or fingerprints on the painting. This is surprising because on (38) _____ works by Leonardo, scientists have found fingerprints using digital media. Despite (39) _____ the modern technology available (40) _____ us, we still do not know everything about the mysterious painting. It will take much more than modern technology to uncover the secrets of The Mona Lisa.

Ever wondered how Man used to create houses two million years ago? The types of houses built depended on the enviroment that Man lived in. Most humans often slept in treetops, building nests of trees and moss. There, they were safe by predators that romed the forest at night. Man also used naturel shelters such as caves. Hides hung at the entrance kept out the cold and wind. Sometimes, much family groups shared a large cave. For those who lived near a forest, they built huts of branches or leaves. When they travelled across the savannahs, where branches were scarce, they used huge mamoth bones for a framework. They then covered the huts on animal hides. The hides were all they had to carried with them when they moved on.

(42)

(43)

(45)

(46)

(47)

When they stopped to camp, they could always find more bones and quickly put up

For several hours, Vanash wandered around the city centre, not daring to leave it since it was the only place he had come to know. The villagers had melted away down the many roads that led to the docks. No one had asked him to come with them. He was left behind.

Now that he was alone, he became aware that he was dreadfully thirsty. He saw a man sitting beside a barrow heaped with coconuts and went towards him, feeling his pockets for the few coins he had brought with him.

"How much?" he asked. Never having bought a coconut before, he had no idea of the price and nearly fainted when the man said, "Two rupees." The man had a sharp, stern face, but when he saw Vanash's face, he laughed kindly. "What's the matter? Don't you know how much these things cost in the city? No, I can see that you don't. Here, I'll find you a cheaper one!" He searched the pile for a small coconut and cut the top off with one blow from his curved knife and handed it to Vanash. While Vanash drank, he watched amused and said, "You look as if you haven't eaten or drunk all day."

"I haven't," Vanash admitted, wiping his mouth and reaching for the top of the coconut to scoop out the sweet flesh. "I am hungry and thirsty."

"I can see that," nodded the man. "Run away from your village, have you?"

"I came with the procession," said Vanash proudly. "You saw the procession that was here just now? We came from Alibagh this morning."

"Oh, to ask the King for what – food, palaces, jewels?"

Vanash tried to explain that he and his fellow villagers came to Bangada to offer a special tribute to the King but the coconut seller did not seem interested. He only said, "Do you think the King cares? Don't ask him for anything. Don't depend on him for anything! Be a man and depend on yourself. I tell you my father and my mother abandoned me when I was six years old and I have been earning my own living ever since."

Vanash listened in awe and nodded. He was ready to learn more from this wise and admirable man. However, the man did not seem to be interested in saying more. He had turned to opening coconuts for a young man and woman while they stared at Vanash's rags and tattered shoes in disdain. Vanash knew he ought to move out of their way and quickly headed down the pavement. 30

Suddenly, he heard a voice say, "Don't listen to that Mullau. By day, he uses his knife on coconuts but by night, he uses it in gang fights." Vanash turned around and saw the speaker draw his finger across his throat and stick out a betel-stained tongue. Vanash was so startled that the beggar laughed opening his mouth wide and showing that all of it was stained with betel juice. 35
