Spanish cuisine is a colourful combination of colours and flavours. However, there are only a handful of Spanish eateries in Singapore that are (21) authentic, and even fewer that actually (22) adapt Spanish menus to suit local taste buds. However, the newly-opened Sol Tasca does just that.

Although Sol Tasca means sun tavern, you will actually be away from the sun because the restaurant is (23) housed under the Esplanade Bridge. With the Merlion as its friendly water-spewing neighbour, the restaurant serves mainly (24) large groups of tourists throughout the day.

When the sun takes a breather, dining under the stars at its open-air verandah can be quite a unique (25) affair. Sol Tasca, the latest Spanish addition to our food scene, is definitely worth a try.

Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

Dawan moaned, "Nobody can help me, or would want to."

Bao snorted, "If you don't have faith in yourself, then who will? You've earned your chance to fly to a bigger world, to pursue your own ideals. You have to push forward and struggle if you want to be free, and equal to your brother."

To reiterate her point, Bao opened one of the cages, freeing a bird which immediately soared into the clear blue sky. Dawan watched the tiny speck in the distance. She turned to Bao, and said breathlessly, "I understand what you mean." 5

Suddenly, Bao stiffened. Her attention seemed riveted on a figure striding towards them from behind a nearby fish stall.

"Quick! Hide!" Bao ordered urgently, her voice low with dread. 10

"Why? What are you afraid of?" Dawan whispered.

"It's my brother. The bird...You can't pay, can you? He'll be furious!" She shoved Dawan away hurriedly.

Bao's brother swaggered to the stall and realised that his sister had yet again set a bird free without collecting money. Vichai delivered a stinging slap across Bao's face. Bao did not flinch. Instead, she opened as many cage doors as she could and watched the scattering flight of the sparrows with grim glee. 15

Losing his patience, Vichai brought his fist down again. Before his fist landed on Bao's face, Kwai dashed over and grabbed Vichai's arm.

Vichai stopped, glared at his sister and strode away. 20

Bao turned to thank her saviour. Realising he was none other than Dawan's brother, she burst out, "Another brother! What false help I've been given! Kwai, why do you help other people's sisters when you are so mean to your own?"

Angered by Bao's words, Kwai raised his fist and was about to strike Bao when Dawan intervened. Kwai pushed her roughly aside. Dawan was knocked backward and fell right on top of the broken bird-cages. A hot searing pain ripped through her left leg. 25

Stunned by what he had done, Kwai remained completely still. Remorse rocked his entire being and all he could do was to stare at his sister.

26 What was the main reason for Bao initially releasing the bird?

- (1) She did it to cheer Dawan up.

- (3) She wanted Dawan to believe in herself.
- (4) She saw the bird struggling and wanted to end its misery.

27 Bao believed that Dawan's road to freedom was _____.

- (1) within grasp if given an opportunity
- (2) easy as long as Dawan had faith in her own abilities
- (3) tough but achievable if Dawan persevered and strove towards it
- (4) difficult and unattainable as there were too many obstacles in her life

- (1) pity
- (2) fear
- (3) worry
- (4) hatred

29 Bao 'watched the scattering flight of the sparrows with grim glee' (line 17). This phrase tells us that Bao _____.

- (1) felt a sense of grief in setting the birds free
- (2) had been planning to get the birds free for some time already
- (3) quietly feared the consequences of her actions in freeing the birds
- (4) was mesmerised by the movements of the birds as they took flight

30 Why did Kwai raise his fist to strike Bao?

- (1) Kwai realised that Bao was his enemy.
- (2) Bao falsely claimed that Kwai was her brother.
- (3) Bao was a bad influence for Dawan so Kwai wanted to teach her a lesson.
- (4) Kwai was unhappy with Bao's comments despite having helped her earlier.

(20 marks)

I woke up one morning to find my face covered in huge red spots. My mother said they were caused by stress and my unhealthy diet. True enough, I had been eating microwave-packed food for weeks, but perhaps that could be due to my allergy to plastic. My mother rang Dr Gray's receptionist to make an appointment, but the earliest he could see me was the following Monday. For all he knew, I could have lassa fever and be spreading it all around the neighbourhood! I read that lassa fever was a serious viral disease of Central West Africa which would cause sufferers to have high fever and muscular pains. 5

I called my mother to say that it was an emergency but she said I was over-reacting as usual. She said a few spots did not mean that I was dying. I could not believe it when she said she was going to work as usual. Surely her child should come before her job? All mothers should show their care and concern to their children. 10

I rang Grandma and she came round in a taxi to take me to her house. Grandma's house was very clean and peaceful. I wore my dead grandpa's pyjamas. Grandma cooked me a bowl of barley and beef soup. It was my first proper nourishment for weeks. I expected there would be a row when my mother came home to find me missing. Frankly, I did not care. 15

The doctor came to Grandma's house that night. I was diagnosed with acne vulgaris. He said that acne vulgaris was so common that it was regarded as a normal state of adolescence. He thought it was highly unlikely that I had lassa fever because I had never been to Africa. He told Grandma to remove the disinfected sheets off the doors and windows – she had put up them earlier in a bid to contain the disease. Grandma said she would like a second opinion. That caused the doctor to lose his temper. He shouted very loudly, "The lad has only got a few teenage spots, for goodness sake!" 20

Grandma said she was going to complain to the Medical Council but the doctor just laughed and went downstairs and slammed the door. My dad came round the next morning before he went to work. He brought my homework and my dog. He said that if I was not out of bed when he returned at lunchtime, he would punish me severely. 25

Dad took Grandma into the kitchen and had a discussion with her. I heard him saying, "Mum, stop giving in to every excuse that Adrian makes. He should be in school today." Surely my father had made a mistake. My school vacation had started two weeks ago. 30

So, the worst had happened, I had an acne outbreak and my holidays were ruined. To hide my ugly face, I turned down all the outings with my friends, spending every day in solitary confinement at home. Instead of fun and excitement, I had the opposite. 35
