Wakeboarding is a combination of surfing, skateboarding, snowboarding and waterskiing.

A wakeboard looks like a fat snowboard with a pair of bindings (21) attached to it. During competitions, wakeboarders do (22) exciting acrobatic stunts in the air and on the water. These tricks are (23) spectacular — some athletes go as high as 25 feet in the air while doing a somersault.

Recreational wakeboarders cover all age ranges and skill levels but the (24) experts are the teens and those in the early 20's. Wakeboarding's (25) relaxed style and attitude is similar to the skateboarding crowd but a little more upscale simply because the sport requires more than a board or blades — it requires a boat to propel them across the water.

Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow it:

After vaguely imagining that she heard a faint hiss from behind the overlapping layers of shrubs, Mala inched closer to Darwan. As if by pure instinct of self-preservation, her little arms moved to circle around one of his.

"Dar...wan," she swallowed with discomfort. "I think there is something out there."

The leader of the group carried on his vigorous discussions with the older boys, pretending not to have heard her. His little sister was imagining things again, like she always had been: reserved, timid and pampered. He should have turned her down when she pleaded to follow. He should not have allowed himself that moment of weakness and consented.

"I think we should be somewhere over here," Jarhan pointed as he turned the badly crumpled map to orientate himself. "If we move southward from here, we should be able to reach the river in about an hour."

"And the river would lead us home," Darwan finished the sentence. "We just need to figure out which way is South." The rest nodded in agreement while one made his way to the front.

"Does this help?" the young boy offered with uncertainty. "That retired sailor from the west village gave it to me. He said before that it points north forever."

Darwan's eyes shone with renewed hope as he received the worn-out looking item. He brushed the layer of mud and dirt over its cover and shook it a little. Seeing that the other boys had huddled over it with enthusiasm, he nudged his way out of the small crowd. "Move aside, I need the light from the moon."

Suddenly, a sharp shriek cut the silence of the night and everyone jumped.

"Mala!" Darwan rolled his eyes with frustration. "Will you just stop being such a baby?"

"There is something there!" In tears, the girl pointed with indignant desperation. "Look! Over there!"

"Oh please, Mala..." Then, he stopped as he spotted for a brief moment where a single bush in the distance moved. Everyone fell speechless when another part rustled, followed almost immediately by another, and another. They were surrounded!

"RUN!" Darwan roared, grabbing the little hand next to him.

The group darted through the dark forest, not knowing where they were heading; not caring about the continuous feeling of pain, their skins brutally pierced by twisted branches and cutting rocks.

Every time Darwan turned, he was dismayed to see that they were still being pursued. The constant myriad of moving shadows, the ravenous gnashing of teeth and the frenzied stirring of the leaves and dirt behind them confirmed that. Worse, it was... no... they were gaining speed, they wanted food, they wanted...them.

Three days ago, I sat through the entire confrontation between China and Singapore on television (TV). At stake – bragging rights to the title (31) _____ the world's best women's ping-pong team. You know (32) _____ score - Singapore won.

There were many nail-biting moments, especially in the first singles match when Feng Tianwei seemed bemused (33) _____ the clever strokeplay of her China opponent, Ding Ning. Predictably, some folks here have turned party-poopers, saying the victory is hollow (34) _____ the Singapore team consists of China imports.

Are these criticisms fair? If you had caught the TV telecast of the match you would have seen great sportswomen, (35) _____ they are imports or foreigners, at play. You (36) _____ have seen that, in the cauldron of intense competition, it is other attributes that come to the forefront, not so much the name of the country at the back of their shirts (37) _____ the wonderful talents, the steely resolve and the mental strength. Feng showed us that (38) _____ the long days and nights spent honing our craft and skills, in the sports hall, classroom or office, are worth (39) _____. She proved that your identity card – stating whether you are Singaporean (40) _____ mainland Chinese – does not automatically bring you fame or riches.

You still have to go out and do battle.

The iconic Lau Pa Sat comes alive as hungry office staff march towards the food centre during lunch hours. However, regular patrons interviewed paint a different picture of the food centre late at night. They say that it is not uncommon to find rodents scurried along the ground at night.

(41)

(42)

Statistics provided by the National Environment Agency (NEA) show that the number of rat enclaves found in Singapore has increased. No fewer than 1,687 areas have been found with rats by the authorities this year. Furthermore, more building owners have also been fined for attracting rodents because of poor mentainense or uncleared rubbish. Pest control firms say the problem lies with many food establishments which do not follow the regulations in the hope of save costs.

(43)

(44)

(45)

(46)

They also pin the blame in more construction activities fuelled by a resurgent economy.

(47)

Part of the problem at Lau Pa Sat is that construction projects surrounding it driving rats out of their nests. Hence, the food centre becomes a prime target whom the rats hunt for food. The NEA is concerned about this as rats can ~~kontaminate~~ ~~minet~~ food with their droppings, urine and fur. The agency states that it would be an ~~emberasing~~ sight if rats should continue to flood the food centre especially with tourists visiting the area regularly.

(48)

Skunks are actually nice little stinkers. When they are happy, they smell just fine.

However, they do not like being pushed (51) _____ and they do not like anything bigger than they are. When skunks feel threatened, they have a not-so-secret weapon and they are not (52) _____ to use it.

Let's say you are walking through the woods and you find yourself in a face-off with a skunk. Since you are a lot bigger than a skunk, the skunk naturally (53) _____ threatened. The skunk stamps the ground with its tail. Its (54) _____ may chatter. Then the skunk (55) _____ on to phase two, raising its bushy tail, but the tip is still limp. What do you do?

Still too terrified to move? When the tip of the tail stiffens, you have got your (56) _____ warning. The trick is to move away (57) _____ that happens. Now you are in real (58) _____. Armed with enough ammunition for four or five shots, the skunk lets loose an oily golden liquid. That oily, noxious fluid is so strong (59) _____ it can make you sick to your stomach and cause temporary blindness if it gets in your (60) _____. Skunks, except baby ones, have perfect aim. Fortunately, the skunk will not be able to 'skunk' anyone else anytime (61) _____. It takes between one (62) _____ ten days to recharge.

Most animals figure out early on that any meeting with a skunk is basically a no-win (63) _____. The biggest, meanest bear that (64) _____ face-to-face with a skunk will get out of the way fast. The exception (65) _____ this rule of animal behaviour is the dog, which just never seems to learn its lesson. What do you expect from something that drinks from the toilet bowl?

Derrick woke up early that morning. Grudgingly, he got ready to leave the house. The one hour science lesson in school with Mrs Tan was not going to make a difference to his science grades, he thought. Unlike mathematics, science was not exactly his cup of tea. "Have you made any new friends yet, Derrick?" Mrs Carter watched her son stuffing schoolbooks into his bulging backpack. Not again, Derrick thought. He hesitated, reluctant to answer his mother's query. Without meeting his mother's gaze, Derrick finally mumbled, "Ah...yes, there's one." "Oh, good!" said his mother. "What's his name?" Again, Derrick paused before answering. "Hmmm...Bing," he muttered at last. Swinging his backpack, he made a dash for the front door before his mother could question him further. When Derrick reached the lift lobby, the lift doors were already open, waiting for him. "Good morning, Bing," he said as he entered the lift. "Ground floor, please." The doors of the lift closed with a musical "bing!" as if on cue and Derrick began his regular morning journey down from the eleventh floor. It had been four months since Derrick and his family moved to this new neighbourhood, beginning a time of misery and loneliness for the twelve-year-old. He choked every time his classmates tried to make conversations with him. However, he had told his mother the truth when he said he had made one friend. He had always noticed that whenever he used the lift, it was always there, waiting for him, with the doors wide open, just as they were today. Even more amazingly, the lift always took him directly to the ground floor, without stopping for other passengers or requiring the push of a button. Derrick had come to feel a real friendship for the helpful lift and he was no longer unhappy as he went to and from school each day. Today, the lift was just passing the third floor when it shuddered and jerked to a sudden stop. The doors remained closed and the button lights went dark. Derrick began to panic. His eyes darted from the floor buttons, to the ceiling, to the floor. He was about to shout when suddenly the lift jerked to life again. It began to descend once more and the lighted buttons went from 2 to 1. At the ground floor, Derrick heard the familiar "bing!" and the doors wheezed open. Still greatly frightened, Derrick dashed out of the lift and onto the void deck. He stared wildly at the lift he had once considered his friend. He felt betrayed. "How could you do this to me?" he said to himself softly. It made him sad to think about it. He was trudging down the pavement towards the direction of the school when the second terrifying event of the morning took place. A tremendously loud sound shook the air and sent his heart pounding again. About five metres ahead of him, a massive air conditioning unit had fallen to the ground. The pavement beneath the huge unit was smashed into tiny pieces. Derrick shuddered as he imagined what would have happened to	5 10 15 20 25 30 35 him if he had been standing on that spot.

Then, like a light suddenly switched on in his head, the truth of the situation flashed upon him. "Bing!"

Feeling guilty, Derrick hurried back to the void deck where the lift was still waiting, its doors open in welcome.

"Thank you, Bing," Derrick muttered. Bing was a true friend, indeed.
