Singapore and Malaysia have agreed to open a rapid transit rail service to connect the city-state with the southern Malaysian city of Johor Bahru by 2018. Yesterday, a 20-year wrangle over the Malayan railway land that had dogged ties (21) between Singapore and Malaysia came to a close after both sides put pen to paper and agreed on the implementation details of a landmark land swap.

This was hailed as a deal that would take the relationship between the (22) neighbours to a new level. Among the major components of the deal is a (23) Rapid Transit system (RTS) link that will allow for speedy commutes between Johor Bahru and Singapore. This is finalised after months of negotiations between officials from both countries.

In a joint statement, both PM Lee and Datuk Seri Najib said the collaboration would pave the way for both countries to explore new areas of (24) cooperation. They also reiterated their desire to further strengthen ties. Malaysian (25) Prime Minister Najib Razak has in fact described the recent agreement reached with Singapore over Malayan Railway land and the Tanjong Pagar train station as a 'major breakthrough'.

The Seoul Times Sunday 4 August 1998

The Sampoong Department Store was a scene of horror with hundreds feared dead after the six-storey building collapsed. The tragedy began at about 6pm when the popular store was packed to the brim with shoppers. Suddenly, the ceiling of the second last floor came crashing down, causing the floors beneath it to buckle under the weight. 5

It is thought that about 1200 people were in the building at the time and that few were able to escape. As rescuers and bulldozers sift through the rubble for survivors, eighty people have already been found dead, with hundreds more injured or missing.

Some of the hardest to get to are the people who had been eating dinner in the basement food area where the entire building caved in on top of them. 10

When Sampoong Department Store was built in 1987, it was originally designed to be an office building with four floors. But Mr Lee Joon, the building's owner, decided he wanted to turn it into a department store instead. This meant removing support columns to make room for escalators. When the construction company refused to make the changes, Mr Lee sacked them and hired another one. 15

He also decided to add a fifth floor to accommodate an ice skating rink which Mr Lee later replaced with eight restaurants. Once again, the builders advised him against it, stating that the structure could not support an additional floor. Again, he fired them and found another company to replace it. 20

The store finally opened three years on and became a hit; about 40 000 people walked through its doors every day, attracted by more than 550 upmarket shops and restaurants catering to Seoul's well-to-do. 25

But in April in 1995, cracks began to appear in the ceilings — moving from one floor to the next. Not wanting to lose money, Mr Lee and the building managers moved some stores from the top floor to basement, thinking that this would solve the problem. 30

For each question from 26 to 30, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Make your choice (1, 2, 3 or 4). Shade the correct oval (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet. (5 marks)

- (1) Sampoong Department Store admitted only Seoul's well-to-do customers.
- (2) Sampoong Department Store held an ice skating rink, shops as well as restaurants.
- (3) Mr Lee Joon had never faced any glitch in the development of Sampoong Department Store.
- (4) The owner of Sampoong Department Store's decision to move some stores from the top floor to basement when he saw signs of trouble proved costly.

Rice dumplings, or 'zong zi', are available all year round. However it is a (41)traditional to eat them during the Dragon Boat Festival, which (42)fall on the fifth day of the fifth (43)looner month.

There are different stories to the origins of the festival but the widely accepted one is that it (44)cormemoretes the death of Qu Yuan. He was a patriot, in the fourth centry BC, who had (45)drown himself in protest against (46)corupsion. Qu Yuan was a very influential and charismatic man. He was (47)respected by the people, who went in boats to search for his body.

This became the origin of the Dragon Boat race. When they failed to (48)found his body, they placed rice in the river as a (49)sacrefice. The rice was wrapped in bamboo (50)leaf to prevent the fish from eating it. This has evolved into today's rice dumplings.

Fill in each blank with the most suitable word.

The tiny humming bird gets its name from the sound it makes when it flaps its wings.

This colourful bird flaps its wings fifty to sixty (51) _____ a second. To many people, this is quite an amazing feat. How (52) _____ can you click or snap your fingers in a second? When the eggs are hatched, the mother feeds (62) _____ fledglings by thrusting her bill down their (63) _____. Then, vibrating her body, she regurgitates the sweet nectar (64) _____ her stomach. The pretty humming bird is found in the tropical regions (65) _____ North and South America and in Cuba. It was a sparkling clear December morning. The land around was flat, much of it parched and open. A few rice fields were fenced and bordered with coconut and palm trees. Kevin and I were watching with fascination as our two companions stalked silently.

Itu walked with his eyes on the ground, missing no clues. His ten-year-old son, Raja, tiptoed along behind. We moved closer when Itu stopped to study a rat hole. The moist clay bore the perfect impression of a snake's belly. "It's a medium-sized cobra," said Itu. "Probably a female. It was out at night, probably hunting and entered the hole before dawn." We were impressed but not surprised at all.

Itu used a crowbar to dig. The instant he saw the snake's tail, he grabbed it and stepped back with one quick motion, hauling out a metre-long cobra, its neck flared in fright. The hunter pinned the hissing head to the ground with the steel bar, then gently slipped his prize into a bag. It would not do to injure the snake. It was destined for the Snake Park.

Such was the lifestyle of Itu, who was from the tribe of the Iralus. Unfortunately, this lifestyle is being eroded, bit by bit. Urban sprawl, the conversion of forests into land for housing, and pollution are both making it more and more difficult for Iralus to survive as hunters. Kevin and I were interested in the tribe's plight and wanted to help them find ways of adapting to their changing environment.

Another trip out with Itu and Raja in search of snakes yielded an unexpected bonus. Raja climbed up a tree and came down with a honeycomb, which we all shared. The Iralus ate the baby bees as well as the honey. Later we waded through a weed-choked canal to watch Raja hunt water snakes. He used a stick to tickle a crab hole in the muddy embankment until a fat water snake dived out. Raja snatched up the thrashing reptile and was bitten on the hand. Although the bite was not poisonous, it was painful.

Like all Iralu snake catchers, Itu disdained hospitals and modern medical treatment. Instead, he placed his trust in his herbal mixture called "veley", a greenish tea which he prepared himself from bark and herbs and gulped it down. The Iralus believed the potion was an antidote for snakebite. Itu had used the antidote and had survived ten cobra bites. Itu's way of curing poisonous bites by using bark and herbs might seem useless to a Westerner but to an Iralu, this is the only cure, the most effective one.
