Zoni Creative Science Award 2012

Use your creativity to invent a toy for all!
Deadline: 1 November 2012

Ignite those creative sparks and register now as an individual or get a friend to join you in creating your own unique toy. It's time to unleash your creativity!

The Zoni Creative Science Award is here again! This year marks the milestone 15th year anniversary of the toy-making competition that encourages creativity and promotes the learning of science in children. To celebrate this special occasion, we will be sending the top winners of this year's competition on an all-expense paid trip to Korea. Once again, we ask all the young creative geniuses in Singapore to put on your thinking caps and create a toy that you and your friends will enjoy playing with. The emphasis is on the unique and ingenious toys that will 'wow' the judges.

The theme for this year's competition is "My Dream Toy on Holiday". Create the toy of your dreams that you would love to take with you on a holiday. Your toy can be made of any material as long as it is fun, safe and sturdy. The toy must demonstrate at least one scientific principle. Submit your dream toy along with a 50 word description on why this is the dream toy which will keep you entertained during your travels.

Jointly organised by:

ZONI

Supported by:

Read the passage below and answer Questions 26 to 30.

The first shock that I received on reaching Easter Island had nothing to do with the stone figures I had come to see. It was the sight of the island itself that had filled me with astonishment. It was so barren; there were no trees, and it was apparent that scarcely any ground was good enough to support crops or even much grazing. However, nobody looked hungry or unhappy.

The second shock left me in a state of wonder. Many people had indeed seen photographs of the enormous stone figures, but the pictures showed single statues or groups of only three or four. What I now discovered was that there were hundreds: they were all over the island. There were fully formed statues, plainly ready to be taken away to their resting place, but there were also huge unshaped 'logs' of rock, waiting to be attacked with the stone axe, which was the only shaping tool the makers had; and there were figures in every stage between. To wander among them was a haunting experience. There was one in particular, lying on its back, staring forever into the sky, that fascinated me. I felt that if it had suddenly got up and walked, I would not have been surprised.

15

Every visitor must be mystified as to how the figures were moved. They were massive, some more than 10 metres tall, and weighing more than 80 000 kilos. Yet it seemed that the islanders, in the far-off days when these statues were made, had not yet developed any sort of hauling machinery or any kind of lifting gear. Still they managed to move these immense, silent creatures over rough and, indeed, jagged masses of rock until they got them to the stone bases prepared for them. Often they had to be transported from the quarry over distances of up to six kilometres.

For each question from 26 to 30, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Make your choice (1, 2, 3 or 4). Shade the correct oval (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet (5 marks)

26 The writer's main purpose in visiting the island was to _____.

- (1) view the stone figures
- (2) experience living with the stone figures.
- (3) observe the inhabitants and their way of life
- (4) conduct a research on the condition of the land

27 "The second shock left me in a state of wonder." (line 6) What was the cause of the writer's reaction?

- (1) The inhabitants living peacefully together.
- (2) The scarcity of crops and trees on the island.
- (3) The sight of hundreds of stone figures dotting the island.
- (4) The ability of the stone figures to walk among the inhabitants.

28 Which of the following statements about the island is true?

- (1) There was no space for trees to grow.
- (2) It was populated by only stone figures.
- (3) It was too small for the inhabitants to grow food.
- (4) It was infertile and could not support crops or grazing.

29 Which word in the third paragraph tells you that the writer probably did not understand how the stone figures were removed? The word is "_____".

- (1) silent
- (2) jagged
- (3) immense
- (4) mystified

30 "I felt that if it had suddenly got up and walked, I would not have been surprised". What does this sentence tell about the stone figures? They _____.

- (1) appear life-like
- (2) have magical powers
- (3) look like the inhabitants
- (4) are able to walk on their own

On 15 October 2003, an earthquake struck the town of Neverville. No one paid much

(51) to the increase in seismic activity that had been taking place months before the actual event. A mixture of complacency and disbelief prevented the authorities from

(52) the people about the impending danger. Their buildings were sturdy.

They thought nothing would happen. If the people had been evacuated, the

(53) toll would not have been so high.

On the morning of 15 October everyone carried on life as usual. People went to work and children went to school. At exactly seven minutes past 7am, the ground began

(54) violently. Almost immediately, (55) appeared on the surface of roads and pavements and entire buildings shook and tilted to the side. There was not a single sound in the town except the deep rumbling as structures weakened.

A mere five minutes later, the shaking stopped. There was a stillness in the air for a while. Then screams pierced through the entire town. People began (56) helter-skelter and horns beeped. There did not seem to be much (57) at first. It looked as though a strong wind had just swept through the entire town.

However, at the epicenter of the earthquake, cars had veered (58) the Golden Bridge expressway and fallen into the sea below. Some were dangling over the edge with its occupants desperately trying to clamber out (59) the cars fell into the (60) below. Strangers ran to help one another to try and pull back those

Joseph had been in prison for more than a year before escaping, after knocking out a guard who was bringing food to his cell, and stealing the guard's uniform. He walked all the way to the village of Zakyna and ended up at the edge of a cliff, which dropped steeply into the darkness. He heard the sound of crates being dumped onto the road and decided to hide in one. Suddenly, Joseph realised that the wooden boards he lay on were moving. It was carrying him to the other side of the mountain. The giddy movement of the cage made him feel sick but he knew it was taking him further away from his enemies. When the cage banged to a standstill, a man flashed a torch full into Joseph's face. "I have you covered with my pistol," Joseph said steadily

Joseph had the man lead him to his home. It was a large chalet. When the door opened, he saw a wood fire burning brightly in a wide open hearth. An old lady was sitting by the fire. She looked startled when her husband walked in with Joseph. Joseph threw his cap and greatcoat over a chair. "Here's the pistol I almost shot you with," he said. "It's a slab of chocolate." He broke it into three pieces, giving one to each of them. They were suspicious and waited till Joseph had swallowed his piece before they ate theirs.

"I don't understand," said the peasant slowly. "You speak like a Polish. You look like a Polish. But your uniform..." At that moment, a bell clanged out from the other side of the valley. It echoed among the mountains. It was the prison bell to indicate the escape of the prisoner.

"You've come to search for him?" asked the old lady.

"I am the prisoner," said Joseph. "I knocked out a guard and stole his uniform. Look, if you don't believe me, here's my camp number burnt into my arm. I want you to hide me."

Suddenly, there was a loud bang on the door. Was it a search party? A voice called out in German. There was no time to escape to the woodshed. "Quick! Up there!" The old woman pointed up the chimney. There's an opening on the right, half-way up." Joseph dived into the hearth and hauled himself up over the iron spit. The fire was only smouldering and there was not much smoke. However, he had not found it when the door burst open and two soldiers came in. While they searched the room, he stood very still, his legs astride the chimney. He wanted to cough. He thought his lungs would burst.

Suddenly a head peered up the chimney. It was the old woman. "They've gone upstairs," she said. "But don't come down yet." She showed him where the opening was. He crept inside, coughing. He could see the sky through the wide chimney top above him. He was congratulating himself on his good luck when he heard the soldiers return to the room below. With difficulty he controlled his cough.

"What about the chimney?" said a German voice. Plenty of room to hide up there."

"Plenty of soot too," said the other soldier.

"Your uniform's older than mine. What about you going up?"

"Not likely."

"Then we'll send a couple of bullets up for good luck."

Two ear-splitting explosions. It seemed as if the whole chalet was falling down. Joseph clung on to his perch. There was a great tumbling about his ears. He cling and clung and clung - till his fingers were torn from their grip, and he fell.

When he came to his senses, he was lying on the floor. The old woman was bending over him, washing his face with cold water. "It's all right – they've gone," she said, "The fall of soot saved you. The soldiers ran for it when the soot 50 came down. They were afraid for their uniforms.
