Mr and Mrs Dan had a terrible fight. I've never seen anything like it since Mother and Father would not dream of shouting at each other like that. The argument was based on something so trivial (21) that it did not seem worth wasting a single word on it. It was very difficult for Peter who got caught in the middle, but nobody took Peter seriously anymore since he was hypersensitive and lazy.

Mother and Mrs Dan were not getting along very well. There were enough reasons for this friction. For example, Mrs Dan had removed all but three of her sheets from our communal linen closet. (22) (23)

She had assumed that Mother's could be used for both families. Mrs Dan was ticked off because we were using her crockery instead of ours. Yesterday, I broke one of her soup bowls.

Section F: Comprehension MCQ (5 marks) Read the passage and answer questions 26 to 30.

Given a choice, Peter Coke would like to try his hand at paper-making and feather-work. For the moment though, he would stick to the skill that he had been delighted to perfect over the past ten years, making delicate and unusual objects out of shells.

Peter Coke's apartment was filled with shell-covered ornaments and he said that he would not be at all bothered if people would not buy them. He had never meant to sell his work commercially. Five years ago, his friends came to visit him and insisted that he had an exhibition. After talks with an art gallery owner in London, he had his first exhibition in which seventy percent of the objects were sold, commanding enormous prices.

There were eighty-six pieces in the exhibition, with prices starting at five hundred dollars for a shellflower in a crystal vase. Coke insisted he had nothing to do with the high prices and claimed there was nobody in the world who could produce work like his. Coke wished that he had taken up the art a lot earlier because he would have been able to produce really wonderful pieces then. Although the ideas were still there and he was doing the best he could now, he was more limited physically than he was when he started. Still, the work that he had managed to produce was a long way from the common shell constructions that could be found in seaside shops. His masterpieces included miniature boxes covered in thousands of tiny shells, little shaded pictures made from shells and baskets of astonishingly realistic flowers.

Coke had created his own method but used materials as and when he found them. He used the cardboard sent back with laundered shirts for his flower bases, a type of glue bought in bulk from a sail-maker and washing liquid to wash the shells. The attention he paid to the details, colour gradations and symmetry was amazing.

Coke's quest for beautiful and especially tiny shells had taken him to different parts of the world. He insisted that he only collected dead shells and defended himself against people who wrote him letters accusing him of stripping the world's beaches.

"When I'm collecting shells, I hear people's feet crunching them up faster than I can collect them and the ones that are left, the sea breaks up. I would not dream of collecting shells with living creatures in them," he said. If one bases this argument on the amount of luggage that can be carried home by one man, the sum beauty of whose work is often greater than its natural parts, it becomes very convincing indeed.

For each question from 26 to 30, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Choose the correct answer and shade the corresponding oval on the Optical Answer Sheet.

- What can we learn about Peter Coke in the first paragraph? 26.
  - (1) He had written about his love of using shells to make ornaments.
  - (2) He hoped to work with other materials besides shells in the future.
  - (3) He was praised for the shell ornaments he made many years ago.
  - (4) He had produced hand-made ornaments using paper and feathers. Coke's shell ornaments commanded high prices because
  - (1) the designs were unusual
    - (2) they were sold at an exhibition

    - (3) he set a minimum price for each ornament
    - (4) he used only shells he collected from all over the world
- Which one of the following statements about Coke's shell-collecting activities is 28 true?
  - (1) Not everyone approved of what he had done.
  - (2) Other tourists got in the way of his shell collection.
  - (3) He regretted stripping the world's beaches of shells.
  - (4) Not all the shells were the right size and shape for his work.
- 29 What did Coke regret about his work?
  - (1) He was not as skilful as he used to be.
  - (2) He made less money than he should make.
  - (3) He was less imaginative than he used to be.
  - (4) He was not as famous as he should have been.
- 30

27.

The word 'it' in line 28 refers to

Comprehension Cloze Passage (15 marks) Fill in each blank with a suitable word.

It may be hard to believe, but before the 1930s, no one had ever had the pleasure of biting into a chocolate chip cookie. Why? The sweet world-famous treat had not been created yet. Ruth Graves Wakefield was the woman responsible for coming with the concoction. After her graduation, she ____ (51) as a dietitian and food lecturer. In 1930, Ruth and (52)her husband purchased a toll house located in Massachusetts. The house had originally been built in 1709, and at that , it had served as a haven for road-weary travellers. There, passengers paid (53)tolis, changed horses and ate home-cooked meals. More than 200 years later, the Wakefields decided to ___ on the house's tradition. (54) turning it into a lodge and calling it the Toll House Inn. Ruth cooked home-made meals and baked for guests of the inn. She created new dessert recipes that to the masses. Soon, her incredible (55)desserts began people from all over New England. Many flocked from all over the (56) country to out her amazing desserts. (57) of Ruth's favorite recipes was the Butter Drop Do cookies. As she was preparing

(58) the batter one day, she discovered she had run out of baker's chocolate. Fortunately, she found a semisweet chocolate bar that had been given to her by Andrew Nestle, so she cut it into tiny bits and added them to the dough, expecting them to _______ as the cookies baked in the oven. However, they held their shape and softened to a delicately creamy texture. ______ to say, the cookies were a success. Ruth's creation became very _______ with guests at the inn and soon her recipe (61) was _______ in a Boston newspaper, as well as other papers in the New England area.

Meanwhile, Nestle saw sales of its Semi-Sweet Chocolate Bar ______ dramatically. Ruth and Nestle came together to reach an _______ that would allow Nestle to print the "Toll House _______ (63) Cookie" recipe on its packaging. In _______, Nestle would supply Ruth with all of the chocolate _______ (65) she could use for the rest of her life.

-Section K: Comprehension Open-Ended (20 marks) Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80.

As I came down to the river, there was a boy swimming about in the water. He only had a handkerchief tied round his waist as he swam slowly towards me. As he reached the edge, he raised himself against the bank and looked up. It was Maubert.

While he was trying to hoist himself up on the bank, I was hurriedly gathering stones. In a second or two I had four in my left hand and tight in my right, still another. With my arm flung back, I shouted at the boy who was trying to drag himself up the rocky walls, "Stop where you are!"

With one swift look, he calculated his chances. Half in the water, precariously balanced, he was in no position to defend himself. Wherever he looked, there seemed no way out. I swung my arm above my head. He knew well my aim would be sure. Thereupon he let himself drop into deep water again and gazed at me while floating on his back.

It was Maubert, my enemy. I trembled with rage and ecstatic joy as I looked at him. My blood, beating violently in my veins, thudded through the hand clenched round my missile, as I thought, "Got him!" in much the same way as one becomes aware how difficult some action is only when it has successfully been accomplished.

He looked pretty crestfallen with twelve feet of water under him and hemmed in by the slippery walls. His eyes full of tears, fixed themselves intently on me. I could not conjure up the slightest pity for him. Our childish hatred was of too long standing. A dozen times we had fought each other already, without either of us getting the upper hand. There came to my mind that night when he had pounced on me with a couple of his friends. They were pushing a wheelbarrow along. The street had been dark and it was near the bridge. Totally unsuspecting, all I had heard was my name "Tchamsoun", pronounced in the local way. Immediately, I had been blinded with blows. Nevertheless, by wildly kicking out, striking round me and biting whatever met my teeth, I made them give way long enough to enable me to retreat still facing them, like an angry cat pursued by dogs.

However, it was not the others that mattered, it was Maubert on whom all my hatred fell. When our two schools fought together on Saturdays, for instance, it was always Maubert I aimed at. We would load stones with insults and spit on them at the very moment they were hurled, so as to bewitch them and make them truly strike their goal. Maubert, too, always aimed at me whenever we had these clashes.

Now I had him in my power, one against one, with every advantage on my side. It was as thrilling as ambushing a whole troop of enemies in a ravine. I sat myself down on the bank. He was just opposite me. I was all ready to throw a stone at him should he try to let the current carry him away. Paddling a little with his hands, utterly docile and unable to take his eyes off my-stone, he would return to the old place.

I had got him. He was a good swimmer but he was already beginning to show signs of fatigue. At moments his whole head would go under and come up again, spluttering out the water he had swallowed. I looked at him with fury. I had never seen him so close. In fact, I had hardly known what he looked like. Whenever he spat, the motion made by his lips sent a spasm of disgust through all my body. I watched him carefully, my missile ready. Supposed, instead he had caught me in the water, I would have had that stone hurled at me long ago.
