Years ago in Singapore, shoals of swordfish began swimming up to the shoreline. They killed and injured hundreds of swimmers and fishermen with (19) _____ long, sharp, horn-shaped snouts. Some fishermen believed the fish were taking revenge as many of them had been killed over the years because of their King's liking for collecting swordfish horns. As the King and (20) _____ generals stood on the bloody sand and surveyed the damage, a young boy walked up to them.

The boy suggested a solution, "Why don't we put up a wall of sharp stakes made from banana tree trunks?" The King and his generals listened intently. "This could be placed along the shore to protect the people," (21) _____ added.

The King was very impressed and he immediately ordered his men to build the fence. When the fishes' snouts were stuck in the banana trunks, (22) _____ whipped out their swords and killed them. The King was very pleased with the boy and wanted to reward him.

Section F: Comprehension 1 (10 marks)

Read the passage carefully and answer the questions that follow.

A few years ago, after a long morning of sightseeing in New York, my children and I took a breather at Central Park. "Look!" my son said, pointing to a nearby rubbish bin. That was when we saw our first raccoon. Quite at home in a big city, he paid us no heed, concentrating only on finding a tasty lunch. He sorted through a few options before emerging with a wrapped sandwich, held between his paws. 5

Satisfied, he jumped down steadily and ambled nonchalantly towards a spot on the gravel path, less than a metre from where we sat. The children were fascinated by the raccoon which had entertained them much better than any museum. 10

I tried to walk forward to the gravel path but he turned around and gave us a glance, perhaps as reassurance that we were not about to take his lunch. With his delicate fingers, he peeled back the layers of plastic wrap until the half-eaten sandwich was uncovered.

Then he surprised us all. Instead of starting on his food, he turned to a nearby rain puddle and dipped his hands in a casual air. He rubbed his hands together underwater for a moment, preened his whiskers and then delicately picked at his meal. 15
