He arrived in Singapore at the age of 17, without a cent to his name. Yet, when he died, Tan Kah Kee had achieved more in his lifetime than most people could ever hope to.
(16)

Frequently referred to as one of Singapore's pioneers, he made a great impact on education in Singapore.
(17)

Tan Kah Kee worked initially as an apprentice for his rice merchant father when he arrived in Singapore in 1890. He later went on to start his own business and made a fortune selling rubber and making rubber products, which earned him the nickname "the Rubber King". At the age of 45, he was one of the richest men in Singapore but Tan Kah Kee was not satisfied with merely enjoying the trappings of his wealth. Instead, he made it his (18)

commitment and duty to see that thousands of young people would benefit from the education he would help to provide.
(19)

Today, the legacy of Tan Kah Kee lives on in many educational institutions he helped to establish here. This is quite an achievement for a man who had only eight years of formal education as a child.

NATIONAL Spelling CHAMPIONSHIP 2014

Can you spell
"concentration"?

Singapore's favourite mind sport is back!

The Straits Times and RHB Banking Group
are pleased to present
the National Spelling Championship for the third consecutive year. This competition aims to lift primary school pupils' proficiency of the English language while injecting adrenaline-pumping fun.

The competition is open to Primary 4, 5, 6 pupils or those in the primary section of a full school or equivalent under the Ministry of Education Singapore (MOE).

Interested participants must be nominated by their schools, which will register them directly with the MOE.

Look out for a special series on how to improve your spelling in Little Red Dot, The Straits Times' weekly publication for primary schools. The series began on Jan 28.

(Go on to the next page)

- Registration is now open for the pen-and-paper preliminary round on March 1, where competitors must spell 50 words that are read out to them. Top scorers will then proceed to the zonal rounds.

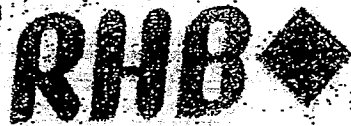

For Teacherst

- Free workshop by The Straits Times and MOE for all teachers from MOE schools who have pupils taking part in the competition.
- MOE master teacher Soo Kim Bee and The Straits Times' Schools correspondent Debra Ann Francisco will share tips and classroom activities in a hands-on workshop to help teachers give their pupils life-long spelling skills.
- Teachers interested in the workshop can write to bigspell2014@punch.com.sg with their details.

Words from the organisers:

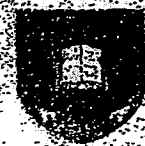

- "We're all thrilled that The Big Spell has become the mind sport to watch every year," said Ms Serene Goh, the editor of Little Red Dot.
- The Straits Times deputy editor Zuraidah Ibrahim said, "Besides making you seem smart, spelling is also critical in conveying exactly what you mean."
- Mr Kellee Kam, group managing director of RHB Banking Group, declared, "We are committed to the holistic development of young minds, and we want to build generations that are confident and highly motivated so that they can ultimately lead successful lives."
- "Also, the competition is a good platform for pupils to display values like resilience and sportsmanship," said Mrs Ruth Tai, assistant director of the MOE's Gifted Education Branch.

Jogging not only makes you feel wonderful, but it is also one of the most natural and effective ways of exercising the heart and lungs. Jogging is running 'free (29) easy', at a comfortable trot. (30) is no urgency, no strain, no competition.

The idea is to jog (31) a pace that makes you no more than moderately breathless. (32) you do it for long enough and often enough, in gradually increasing sessions, it will (33) build up the stamina of your heart and lungs, and strengthen your leg muscles. The steady, easy rhythm (34) jogging will help to ease mental and physical tension and lift depression. The joy of jogging is that virtually anyone (35) do it, young or old. Also, you can do it anywhere or anytime. As with any other heart and lung exercise, you will benefit most if you jog as often as possible, preferably every day, but if you cannot manage that, (36) other day is often enough. The training effect is lost if you jog less often.

The pond was very big, so people swam at one side while others fished at the other. I had always been able to swim and my friends used to say that was because fat floats well, I did not mind. They called me Sausage.

I swam but I never dived – not from any diving board, thank you. I had to take my glasses off and I could not see without them, so I was not going to dive, and they stopped nagging about it long ago. 5

Then, one summer, my instructor made me learn duck-diving. I would be swimming on the surface of the water and suddenly I upended myself just like a duck and dived deep into the water. I had to swim to the bottom of the pond, and pick up a brick he had thrown in, and bring it up again. You practise that in case you have to rescue anyone from drowning. Of course they would be bigger and heavier than a brick, but you have to begin with bricks and work up gradually to people 10

The swimming instructor said, "Sausage, I'm going to throw the brick in –" it was brick with a piece of old white cloth wrapped round it to make it more visible underwater. "—Sausage, I'm going to throw it in, you go after it — go after it, Sausage, and get it before it reaches the bottom and settles in the mud or you'll never get it. 15

He had made everyone come out of the water to give me a chance to succeed, and they were standing and watching. I could see them blurred along the bank as I was treading the water, waiting. Then I saw the brick go over my head as he threw it, and there was a splash as it went into the water ahead of me. I took a deep breath and then my head went down and my legs went up into the air and I went right down into the water. 20

The water was like a thick greenish-brown lemonade. The brick went down a few seconds ahead of me but I could still see a whitish glimmer that must be the white cloth around it. It was fading into the lower water as I moved after it. It was dark underwater and I could hardly see anything at all, but I caught up with the brick. It looked different down there, and it had already settled in the mud — there was only one corner sticking up. I dug into the mud and got hold of the thing and then I let myself go up. I shot upwards as I was in a hurry. The colour of the water changed as I went up and then I could almost see the sun shining through the water. 25 30

Then suddenly, I was at the surface — I had exploded back from the water into the air. Pond water was trickling down inside my nose and into my mouth. I let out the breath I had been holding and took a couple of fresh, quick breaths and treaded water and held up the brick. 35

I noticed the instructor and my friends shouting from the bank. My friends were cheering and shouting and then I heard the instructor bellowing, "Sausage! Sausage! What on earth have you got there, Sausage?"
