Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

Known as a war heroine, a humanitarian, a politician and a teacher, 96-year-old legend, Elizabeth Choy, died in September 2006 after a battle with cancer. Family members said that she died at 2 p.m. at home, surrounded by her loved ones. The wake was later held at the St Andrew's Cathedral.

Elizabeth Choy was born Yong Su-Moi in Sabah in 1910 but moved to Singapore in 1929 to further her studies. Responsibility came early to this eldest of six children when her mother passed away early. Of Hakka descent, she became a teacher to support her siblings – a vocation she returned to later in life.

In 1941, Elizabeth got married to Choy Khun Heng but life would soon turn hellish. During the Japanese Occupation, both she and her husband were captured by the dreaded Japanese Kempeitai – the military arm of the Japanese Imperial Army when Singapore fell. Accused of passing food, medicine and messages to the British prisoners-of-war, she was locked up and tortured for 193 days.

In a recent documentary, she recalled those times to her grand-daughter, Andrea. "My most agonising torture was when – besides all the kicking and punching – they applied electricity to my bare body. Nothing could compare to the electric shocks," said Elizabeth. After the war, the War Tribunal asked the war heroine if she wanted her torturers executed. She firmly disagreed.

"If not for the war, they would be just like me. They would be at home with their family, doing ordinary things and peaceful work. Let us pray that there will be no more war," said Elizabeth.

Elizabeth went on to be awarded a number of medals for valour and service to the nation, including the Order of the British Empire. There were fun times as well, such as the little-known fact that she had turned to modelling to supplement her income during a 4-year stint in the United Kingdom after the war.

After returning to Singapore, this war heroine then turned to politics-making history by becoming Singapore's first female legislator. She then stood for elections in the Queenstown constituency but lost. Elizabeth then left politics to return to her first love – teaching. She spent 40 years teaching.

When asked some years ago which part of her remarkable life she would like to be remembered for, there was no hesitation.

"Teaching is a noble profession. You have young people and you help to mould them so teaching is very important," said Elizabeth.

In the end, perhaps, that is Elizabeth Choy's lasting legacy. She taught a nation what it is to live a life less ordinary.

For each question from 26 to 30, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Make your choice (1, 2, 3 or 4). Shade the correct oval (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet. (5 marks)

26. According to the passage, why would Elizabeth's life soon turn hellish?
- (1) She was battling with cancer.
 - (2) She had to adjust to married life.
 - (3) She was accused and imprisoned by the Japanese for being a spy.
 - (4) She had to take care of her siblings when her mother passed away.
27. In what way was Elizabeth a war heroine?
- (1) She got married during the war.
 - (2) She turned to politics after the war.
 - (3) She took care of the British prisoners-of-war.
 - (4) She survived the torture during the Japanese Occupation.
28. Why did Elizabeth not want her torturers to be punished?
- (1) She was worried that they would take revenge.
 - (2) She was sure that there would be no more war.
 - (3) She did not want them to go through the ordeal of being tortured.
 - (4) She felt that the torturers should not be blamed as they were only acting under orders from their superiors.
29. Elizabeth wanted people to remember her most for her role as a _____.
- (1) teacher
 - (2) politician
 - (3) war heroine
 - (4) humanitarian
30. What does the word 'that' in line 36 refer to?
It refers to _____.
- (1) forgiving her torturers
 - (2) being the first female legislator
 - (3) teaching and moulding the young
 - (4) the ordeal she went through under the Japanese

Six-year-old Ryan sat in shock as he listened to his teacher, Ms Nancy Prest. She was launching a school-wide campaign to raise money for African relief. Ryan winced as she spoke of the sad plight of children living in impoverished, disease-stricken parts of Africa, where there was little access to medicine, food or clean water.

"Every cent helps," Ms Prest told her class. She explained that one cent would buy a pencil, 25 cents; 175 vitamins, 60 cents; a two-month supply of medicine for one child; and $70 would pay for a well.

When Ryan's parents got home, Ryan rushed to them in excitement.

"Mum, Dad, I need $70 for a well in Africa!" he burst out exuberantly.

"Ryan, $70 is a lot of money," his mother said. "We cannot afford that."

"You don't understand," he persisted, tears filling his eyes. "Children are dying because they don't have clean water!"

Sensing his earnestness, his mother said, "If you are serious about raising $70, you can do extra chores around the house," assuming he would soon forget about his project.

Ryan's face lit up. To encourage him, his mother drew a red thermometer on a piece of paper with 35 lines across it, each representing $2. For every $2, Ryan could fill in a line and put his earnings into an old biscuit tin.

His first job was to vacuum the house. When his brothers played outside, Ryan cleaned the house for two hours. He got $2. A few days later, instead of watching a movie with the family, he washed windows. Another $2 was raised.

By mid-April, when the school's fund-raising campaign ended, Ryan's class had raised nearly $30.

"I'm still collecting for the well," Ryan told Ms Prest.

Chore by chore, dollar by dollar, weeks passed and he had finally amassed $70.

Impressed by his determined spirit, Ms Prest called WaterCan, the non-profit agency in charge and told them about Ryan.

"Seventy dollars might not be a lot but this kid has worked hard for it," she said. "I'd like him to give you his money personally."

On the day of the meeting, Ryan nervously handed his biscuit tin to the President of WaterCan.

"Thank you, Ryan," she said, smiling. She began telling him about WaterCan's clean-water projects, explaining that while $70 would buy a hand pump, it would actually cost $2000 to drill a well. Too young to appreciate such a large sum, Ryan replied, "I'll just do more chores, then."
