Ah Seng was preparing a bowl of his famous laksa noodles. Suddenly he heard a tap-tap-tap sound. It was his good friend, Edgar. Edgar was rapping frantically on the window of Ah Seng's laksa stall.

"Hey Edgar," Ah Seng said as he added a ladleful of his special, spicy laksa soup into the bowl of thick noodles.

"You remember the empty stall on the other side of the hawker centre?" Edgar could not say it fast enough.

"Oh, the one that used to sell satay? Yes, why?" Ah Seng asked, still unconcerned.

"Another laksa stall just opened there!" Edgar said. "And there's a long line of customers!" Ah Seng tried to stay calm. No wonder he had noticed there were fewer customers today. In fact, there were only two customers at his stall!

Ah Seng finished preparing the bowl of laksa in his hands, took off his apron and sprinted off.

"Xiao Mei!" he called his sister who was slicing some shellfish in the stall. "Please take care of the customers. I am going over to the new stall now."
