In ancient Greece, Socrates was known to be highly knowledgeable. One day, a woman met Socrates for tea. She wanted to tell Socrates what she had heard about Socrates' friend.

Socrates was a wise man who did not like discussing about his friends with others. He immediately stopped her before she could continue. He told her to pause and put what she wanted to say through the test of Truth. Socrates asked the woman if she was sure that what she wanted to say was the truth.

5

The woman was caught by surprise. She pondered over Socrates' question and admitted to him that what she wanted to say was a rumour.

Then, Socrates asked the woman to put what she wanted to say through the test of Goodness. The woman had to think if what she wanted to say about his friend was something good. The woman thought for a brief moment and told Socrates honestly that on the contrary, what she wanted to say was unpleasant.

10

Socrates frowned. He explained the last test, the test of Usefulness, to her. She had to check if what she wanted to say to Socrates was useful to him. The woman shook her head.

15

Finally, Socrates said, "Well, if what you want to tell me is neither true, nor good, nor even useful, why tell it to me at all?"

The long-awaited school holidays had finally arrived. Father decided to take Jake on a trip to the mountains. They were in a crammed carriage, eagerly waiting for the train to depart. There were more families than usual.

Finally, an automated voice came on, announcing the departure of the train. Jake seemed so surprised to see everything. He exclaimed to his father, "Dad, the train is moving and the things outside are moving backwards."

5

As the train moved, the scenery blurred. Jake squealed unexpectedly, "Dad, the trees are green in colour and run backward quickly."

A drink seller, who was selling various drinks, pushed the trolley past them. The young boy cried, "I love the different colours of the drinks." He could not take his eyes off the drinks and stood up to follow the seller.

10

The families on the train did not bother to conceal their displeasure. They locked their gaze on Jake's father and one of them asked, "What's wrong with your son? He looks like he is fifteen and he is acting like he is five!"

15

Father replied softly, "My son lost his sight at the age of five. He regained his sight a few days ago. He is seeing things for the first time after ten years."

Guilt was written all over their faces. With downcast eyes, they stared at the floor. They learnt a valuable lesson that day.
