Wholesome Bakes

Written by Celeste Nathan

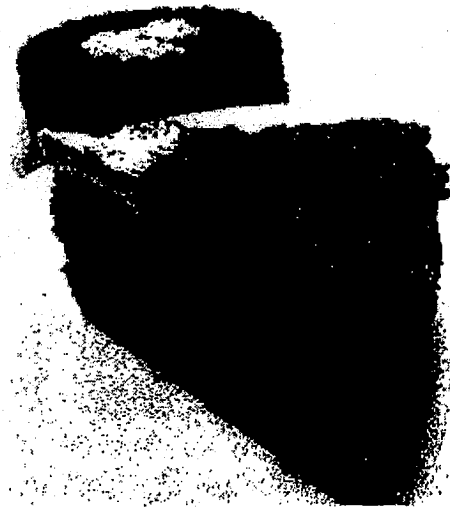

Joe and Gaby, a married couple, run Wholesome Bakes from home, providing nutritious bread and cakes to all who want to eat healthily. They are disciplined about exercising regularly and eating healthily.

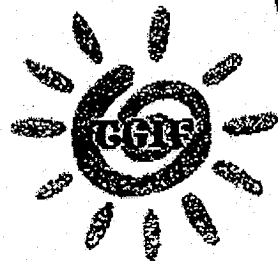

As preparing home-cooked meals in the midst of busy schedules seems like an impossible task to most people, Joe and Gaby decided to quit their full-time jobs and open this bakery. Their aim: to provide healthy bread and cakes for themselves, their friends and all health-conscious people.

At Wholesome Bakes, the ingredients used to bake the bread and cakes are hormone and chemical free. They also do not contain preservatives, artificial colourings, sweeteners and trans fat. Joe and Gaby are single-minded about serving wholesome bakes that taste good and we are sure their efforts are appreciated.

Visit their website at wholesomebakes.sg to check out their products! Call 9123 4567 to place your orders!

Our reader, Ella Sue, wrote to us about this lovely bakery. She has been a regular customer for a year and buys their cinnamon bread and pandan cake every week. For her wonderful recommendation, she has won a $50 TGIF Restaurant voucher! Congratulations, Ella!

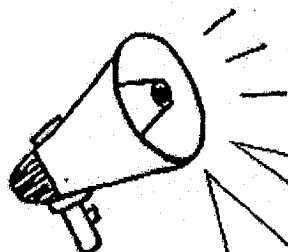

Celeste Nathan and her team got to try some of the bread and cakes available at Wholesome Bakes during their visit!

This is what Celeste said, "Usually, my children don't eat wholemeal bread because they don't like the texture. I was pleasantly surprised by how soft and tasty this was and bought a loaf home for them to try. I'm delighted that my children also liked it and are now eating healthier bread every day!"

Well done, Wholesome Bakes!

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 79.

Clara listened for the sound of the helicopter that was bringing in her grandfather. She had never been so anxious before. She had ensured the medical team and necessary equipment were ready to attend to him immediately upon his arrival.

As Clara sat under the shade of a tree, her thoughts drifted to the times her grandfather would take her on hikes when she was a little girl. He was a burly man with broad shoulders. He would effortlessly carry Clara in one hand and his bag of hiking equipment in the other and would walk for hours. Her love for the outdoors grew under his influence but her interest in exploring remote areas only began recently.

She cringed as her thoughts drifted to the present. As she stared at the vast Amazon jungle, her heart filled with emotion. Why did I let him go? Why couldn't I persuade him to stay behind and let the younger members of the team visit the site?

She knew it was no use blaming herself for the disaster. He was too stubborn to listen to her and now, he, along with his four companions, was afflicted with the virus too. The two others who had returned with news of the discovery of the cave last week were already dead. She knew that they too had little hope of surviving. Thankfully, the virus wasn't contagious from a human host; otherwise, they would all be dead by now.

A sudden whirring sound some distance away stirred her from her thoughts. 'He's here, madam. Perhaps you would like to wait here for him,' one of her crew members suggested.

'No. I am going!' Clara retorted as she marched to the landing site. As she approached the site, she saw her grandfather emerge. Over the years, he had aged and wasn't the sturdy man he once used to be. He even used a walking stick to stabilise himself. However, what she saw shocked her.

In just two days, he had grown so thin, that his clothes seemed to swallow him. He had become skin and bones. As she embraced him, tears welled up in her eyes. The realisation hit her that her grandfather was not a superhero she once thought he was, but a mere mortal - one she was going to save at all costs.
