Bailey had always been afraid of dogs. Just a few days ago, Dad brought Thunder home. Bailey stayed far away from Thunder. Thunder was huge and had a thunderous bark that earned him his name.

One stormy night, before leaving for work, Dad put Thunder in the garage. "There is a storm coming. His doghouse won't keep him dry. Don't worry. He has food and water. You don't need to do anything," he explained to Bailey.

Later that night, the wind blew and the heavy rain started. The sky rumbled and lightning flashed.

While Bailey was reading, he heard a loud thump followed by barking. "Keep quiet, Thunder!" Bailey shouted. Thunder stopped barking. Bailey walked to the garage to check on Thunder as he could hear the dog whimpering.

Bailey's heart pounded as he opened the door and peered through the gap. The garage was pitch dark. Bailey turned on the lights. When Thunder spotted Bailey, he began to move towards him. Quickly, Bailey slammed the door shut. The dog began to whimper again. Bailey felt a sudden rush of sympathy when he realised that Thunder was not only scared of the storm but also the darkness. Bailey sighed. He took a deep breath and began to turn the door knob. He opened the door and said softly, "Thunder, it's all right."

When Bailey squatted to pat him, Thunder tried to climb onto his lap.

Bailey laughed. He sat on a mat and stroked Thunder. He comforted him, "Don't be scared." An hour later, Thunder was calmly nestled next to Bailey. The storm had stopped. Bailey looked at Thunder. He was glad that they both had overcome their fears that night.
