A man (21) lambasted his 3-year-old daughter for wasting a follor gold wrapping paper. Money was tight and he was (22) maddened when the child tried to decorate a box to put under the Christmas tree. Nevertheless, the little girl brought the gift to her father the next morning and said, "This is for you, Daddy."

The man was embarrassed by his earlier overreaction, but his anger flared again when he found out that the box was empty. He (23) took hold of her hand and yelled at her, "Don't you know, when you give someone a present, there is supposed to be something inside?" The little girl looked up at him with tears in her eyes and cried, "Oh, Daddy, it's not empty at all. I blew kisses into the box. They're all for you, Daddy."

The father was (24) awed. He put his arms around his little girl, and he begged for her forgiveness. Only a short time later, an accident took the life of the child. Her father kept that gold box by his bed for many years and, whenever he was (25) discouraged, he would take out an imaginary kiss and remember the love of the child who had put it there.

Section F : Comprehension MCQ (5 marks)

Read the passage and answer questions 26 to 30.

When I was quite young, my father had one of the first telephones in our neighbourhood. I remember well the polished old case fastened to the wall. The shiny receiver hung on the side of the box. I was too little to reach the telephone, but used to listen with fascination when my mother talked to it. Then I discovered that somewhere inside the wonderful device lived an amazing person. Her name was "Information Please" and there was nothing she did not know. "Information Please" could supply anybody's number correctly.

My first personal experience with this genie-in-the-bottle came one day while my mother was visiting a neighbour. Amusing myself with a hammer at the tool bench in the basement, I was careless and I hurt myself. The pain was terrible, but there didn't seem to be any reason in crying because there was no one at home to give sympathy. I walked around the house sucking my throbbing finger, finally arriving at the stairway - The telephone! Quickly, I ran for the footstool in the storeroom and dragged it to the landing. Climbing up, I unhooked the receiver from the telephone and held it to my ear. "Information Please," I said into the mouthpiece just above my head. A click or two and a small clear voice spoke into my ear. "Information."

"I hurt my finger ...," I wailed into the phone. The tears came readily enough now that 1 15 had an audience.

"Isn't your mother home?" came the question. "Nobody's home but me," I blubbered. "Can you open your icebox?" she asked. I said I could. "Then chip off a little piece of ice and hold it to your finger."

After that, I called "Information Please" for everything. I asked her for help with my geography and she told me where Kuala Lumpur was. And there was the time that Petey, our pet canary, lay motionless at the bottom of its cage. I called "Information Please" and told her what I saw. She listened, then said the usual things grown-ups say to soothe a child but I was unconsoled.

She must have sensed my deep sadness, for she said quietly, "Paul, always remember that there is a better place for Petey to sing in." Somehow I felt better.

Then when I was 9 years old, we moved to another city. I missed my friend very much. "Information Please" belonged in that old wooden box back home, and I somehow never thought of trying the tall, shiny new phone that sat on the hall table.

Yet as I grew into my teens, the memories of those childhood conversations never really left me; often in moments of doubt and perplexity, I would recall the serene sense of security I had then. I appreciated now how patient, understanding, and kind she was to have spent her time on a little boy. -Adapted from "Information Please" by Paul Villian

Section K: Comprehension Open-Ended (20 marks)

Laura and Brian Mullin and their 18-month-old daughter, Sarah, were looking forward to Christmas as they arrived to join Brian's family in Northern Ireland on December 21, 1996. However, the next day, their good cheer turned to numbing disbelief when a friend telephoned to tell them, "I'm afraid you've been burgled."	5
	Ŭ
Back home in England in their comfortable 1930s house in an affluent Southampton suburb, they found their world had literally been turned upside down. No room was untouched. The intruders had systematically turned out drawers and cupboards and even emptied the tea caddy in their search for cash. The television and stereo had gone. So had Laura's jewellery, much of it given to her by her grandmother and irreplaceable.	10
The break-in was one of a string of strikingly similar burglaries of well- appointed houses. Most had taken place while the occupants were on vacation. So far, the thieves had plundered goods worth around $425,000. In eight cases, they had even taken the victims' cars to drive away their haul. They had not left a single fingerprint.	15
Detective Inspector Dean Jones, head of Hampshire police's 30-strong Western Area Crime Unit, based in Southampton, had been called in to hunt down the highly professional gang. However, the tough 37-year-old was baffled. In his 19 years as a policeman, Jones had never come across a series of	20 burglaries with no geographical pattern. Normally they happened in clusters in the same town or district, or strung out along highways for a quick getaway. This gang seemed to be raiding at random.	20
Jones set a 12-member team to study the police reports on all the break- ins, hoping to find a link that had been overlooked. It was like searching for a contact lens on an ice rink.	25
Then one detective spotted that two of the victims had flown on vacation from Southampton International Airport. "Is that just a coincidence?" Jones wondered aloud to Olan Jenkins, the 26-year-old constable coordinating the inquiry.	30
"Let's find out how the other victims travelled," Jenkins suggested. He went to see Brian and Laura Mullin. They had flown from Southampton. So had at least six others and all had flown with the same airline: British Airways.
Jenkins talked to airport director, John Bullen, and Roger Edge, general manager of Southampton Handling, the company subcontracted to do ticketing and checking-in reservations for British Airways (BA). They were dumbfounded at the suggestion that BA passengers might be targets. "We'll give you every support," Bullen promised as the list of victims grew.	35
"There's only one way the gang could have got those addresses," Jenkins added. He asked Roger Edge for a name list of all the employees handling ticketing and reservations. Now, the suspects they had to investigate were visibly reduced.	40
Among those on the list was Katherine Woodward, an attractive 23-year-old blonde who had worked at Guernsey Airport before moving to the mainland in early 1996. That April, Roger Edge, impressed by her efficiency, friendly manner, had given her a job on check-in, processing departing travellers. After two months,	45
she was promoted to the ticketing and reservations desk.
