Overweight Pets

Importance of Nutrition

Eating too much food will cause your pet to become overweight. This increases the risk of breathing problems and it may also contract diseases.

Is My Pet Overweight?

All pets have an ideal weight for their size and breed. Your veterinarian will be able to tell you what this is.

If your pet is overweight, you may notice some of the following signs:

- | | |
|---|---|
| <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Ribs cannot easily be felt when you touch your pet's side• Waist is not obvious• Collar needs loosening | <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Difficulty in walking• Slow movement• Shortness of breath• Bad temper• Sleeping more than usual |
|---|---|

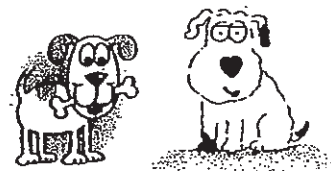

❧ CHECKLIST ❧

- ✓ Make an appointment with your veterinarian to check your pet's weight.
- ✓ Only feed the food recommended by your veterinarian.
- ✓ Divide daily food allowance into several small meals.
- ✓ Instead of scraps and tidbits, reward your pet with small amounts of food from the daily food allowance.
- ✓ Make sure your pet doesn't steal food.
- ✓ Always provide plenty of fresh, clean water.
- ✓ Increase your pet's level of exercise through play and regular walking.
- ✓ If your pet doesn't lose weight, contact your veterinarian.

How Can I Help My Pet To Lose Weight?

Weight problems are common in cats and dogs. They are usually caused by eating too much, especially when combined with lack of exercise. Combining a change in diet with increased exercise is the most effective way of achieving a healthy weight.

Exercise tips for cats:

- Encourage your cat to follow you when you move from room to room, particularly up and down stairs.
- Use toys to encourage your cat to play, or hide food and make him or her hunt for it.
- Shine a torch on walls for your cat to chase.

Exercise tips for dogs:

- Enjoy regular walks with your dog - walking at a constant pace will help.
- Take your dog for walks on different surfaces, such as sand or in water - this provides extra resistance.
- Encourage play in the garden and in the home.

For each question from 1 to 5, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Make your choice (1, 2, 3 or 4). Shade the correct oval (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet. (5marks)

Some inventions start out as one thing, and then when an entrepreneur gets hold of it, it turns into something else (21) entirely.

First developed in the Philippines around 1500, the Yo-Yo was originally not a toy, but a weapon. It (22) consisted of a two-pound stone attached to a cord about six metres long.

Tribesmen used it in two ways. When hunting, they stood off to one side, held one end of the rope, and threw the rock towards the legs of their (23) quarry. The rope became tangled around the animal's legs and, with a tug, the hunter brought it down. When engaging enemies, the tribesmen would (24) lurk in trees until they passed directly below. Then they would drop the stones on their heads.

In 1927, an American named Donald Duncan, who was extremely (25) enterprising, saw a Yo-Yo and spent the next two years transforming it into a plaything and a million-dollar business.

Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30. (5 marks)

Many of us live in noisy surroundings where dangerously high levels of unwanted sound reach our ears all the time – traffic, construction sites, other people's music and conversations. Our brain has a mechanism for shutting out what we do not want to hear, but noise continues to affect our hearing and our health, even when we are not aware of it. 5

Noise is a little-acknowledged but potent health hazard. The level at which continued exposure can damage hearing is 80 decibels, the noise of an alarm clock or a busy office. Many everyday noises, such as a lorry passing close by or a food blender doing its job, are louder than this. 10

Lowering noise levels will reduce stress-related symptoms like headaches and backaches, and will save our hearing too. Children are especially vulnerable. By not exposing them to excessive loud noises, parents will reduce their stress level and protect their hearing. Lower noise levels will also enable us to hear pleasant, soothing sounds like birds singing and the wind in the trees. 15

Noise is one of the most widespread forms of pollution. Because many of us tend to take noise for granted, it is rarely considered a true form of pollution. As such, little is done to reduce it. In recent years, although house-builders and manufacturers of cars and electrical appliances have made much effort to reduce noise, there is still a long way to go. 20

26. In the first paragraph, the writer is saying that _____.

- (1) the noise in our environment may be dangerous to our health
- (2) many people have no choice but to live in noisy neighbourhoods.
- (3) the human brain is able to block out unwanted noises completely
- (4) people are suffering because of loud noises in their surroundings

27. We can protect our hearing from damage by _____.

- (1) stopping the spread of noise pollution x
- (2) living in calm and relaxing environments.
- (3) avoiding prolonged exposure to loud noises
- (4) reducing the number of lorries and food blenders x

28. As children are "...especially vulnerable" (line13), they _____.

- (1) are more likely to be affected by noise than other people
- (2) will be able to hear well once noise levels are reduced
- (3) should remind themselves to relax and avoid noisy places
- (4) may have backaches and headaches when they are stressed

29. According to the writer, not enough is being done to reduce noise because _____.

- (1) it is not a genuine form of pollution
- (2) it has been accepted as being widespread
- (3) many people are used to having noise around them
- (4) manufacturers and builders are already trying to reduce noise

30. Based on the passage, which of the following statements is true?

- (1) It is too late to do anything about noise reduction. x
- (2) Many people are taking noise pollution seriously. x
- (3) Noise pollution is common and can harm our hearing. x
- (4) Noise levels in our environment are beginning to increase.

"Why do we dream?" When Barbara Hammond, a psychologist at Washington State University, was asked this question, the first thing she said was, "Who knows?" The function of dreaming (31) _____ not completely understood. Most psychologists still believe that a person's hidden feelings often surface (32) _____ dreams.

Dreaming, like ~~all~~ mental processes, is a product of the brain and (33) _____ activity. Whether a person is awake (34) _____ asleep, the brain continuously gives (35) _____ electrical waves. At most times during sleep, the brain waves are large (36) _____ slow. During the periods of fast brain waves, the eyes move rapidly (37) _____ though the sleeper were watching a series of events. This stage of REM (Rapid Eye Movement) sleep, is (38) _____ most dreams occur. During REM sleep, the pathways that carry nerve impulses (39) _____ the brain to the muscles are blocked. Therefore, the body cannot move (40) _____ dreams. If awakened during REM, the person is likely to recall details of the dream.

Correct each word in bold for spelling and each underlined word for grammar. Write the correct word in the relevant box.

During the Second World War, Guildford was responsible for conducting intelligence tests and personal interviews to select bomber pilots. He also assigned a retired Air Force pilot without (41) psychology training to aid in the selection process.

Both had different selection (42) kriterie and it was soon discovered that the pilots selected by Guildford (43) was shot down and killed more frequently than those

(44) choose by the retired pilot. Guildford, who (45) conteplated suicide upon learning that he (46) can have indirectly caused their deaths, decided to find out the root of the problem by studying the retired pilot's selection process. (47) Candidites were asked a simple question, "What would you do if your plane were shot by German anti-aircraft?" Instead of hiring those who answered correctly according (48) by the manual, the retired pilot did otherwise. For him, following the manual meant acting in a (49) predikable manner- a dangerous thing to do since the Germans could also foresee those moves. Guildford realised that creative pilots (50) suviored more often than those who, although intelligent, stuck by the rules.

It is a sad and familiar refrain that we often hear in big cities," Can you spare some change?" Usually when confronted (51) _____ that particular question, I am struck with indecision and experience twinges of guilt if I pass by without giving a coin (52) _____ two. My conscience was pricked once again in Venice (53) _____ I was on a tour. I had taken refuge (54) _____ the crowd in a quiet café. Outside, there was an old woman (55) _____ on the hard paving stones, begging. Steady streams of tourists were walking (56) _____ her. A lone young backpacker was observing the woman who had been kneeling motionless. Her flimsy shawl provided little (57) _____ against the cold.

A tourist group bustled along the street, glanced at the woman and walked on. (58) _____ group of tourists arrived and walked past the old lady. The backpacker watched as everybody else went on their way, (59) _____ on the sights around them. Then, as I was preparing to leave, I stopped at the (60) _____ of the young backpacker stepping forward and placing some money in the woman's cup. He did this somewhat ostentatiously just (61) _____ the arrival of another tourist group. As I watched, the (62) _____ of the group stopped and put some money in the cup. Having been shown the way, the group of tourists followed suit and added (63) _____ more coins to the woman's cup.

The young backpacker (64) _____ the process in front of the next group of tourists going past. Once again, the subtle pressure worked (65) _____ the tourists who all added coins to the cup. His work done, the young man walked over to the old beggar woman, patted her on the shoulder and said, "I hope that helps a little."

70. The hungry man needs some food.

What _____

When the money ran out, hunger began to cast a pall over their lives. It was stunning to Mariam how quickly alleviating hunger became the crux of their existence.

Rice, boiled plain and white, with no meat or sauce, was a rare treat now. They skipped meals with an increasing and alarming regularity. Sometimes Rasheed brought home sardines in a can and brittle, dried bread that tasted like sawdust. Sometimes a stolen bag of apples, at the risk of getting his hand sawed. From grocery stores, he carefully pocketed canned ravioli, which they split five ways, Zalmai getting the lion's share. They ate raw turnips sprinkled with salt. Limp leaves of lettuce and blackened bananas for dinner. 5 10

Death from starvation suddenly became a distinct possibility. Some chose not to wait for it. Mariam heard of a widow in the neighbourhood who had ground some dried bread laced with rat poison, and fed it to all of her seven children. She had saved the biggest portion for herself.

Aziza's ribs began to push through her skin, and the fat from her cheeks vanished. Her calves thinned, and her complexion turned the colour of weak tea. Zalmai lay around the house, eyes dulled or half closed, or on his father's lap limp as a rag. He cried himself to sleep, when he could muster the energy, but his sleep was fitful and sporadic. White dots leapt before Mariam's eyes whenever she got up. Her head spun, and her ears rang all the time. She remembered something Mullah Faizullah used to say, "Even the snakebitten man finds sleep, but not the hungry." 15 20

"My children are going to die," Laila said. "Right before my eyes."

"They are not," Mariam said. "I won't let them. It's going to be alright, Laila. I know what to do."

Mariam thought now of the letter her father, Jalil, had left her. She had kept it now for days, beneath her pillow, picking it up now and then, turning it over in her hands. She regretted her foolish youthful pride and wished she had accepted his help earlier. Now, for the sake of the children, she knew what she had to do. 25
