You may find a significant difference between a visit to Chinatown, one of the city's oldest ethnic enclaves previously and nowadays. Why is that so? Mainland Chinese immigrants have staked a claim on the area and are now conducting various businesses with an authentic Chinese flavour. The number of Chinese nationals taking up shops and stalls has gone up while the number of Singaporeans doing so has fallen. Along Smith Street, restaurants that have sprung up, hawk food from Shenyang, Wuhan and Shanghai.

Without hesitation, one can say that their recent arrival has led to more flourishing businesses. With the precinct's renewed and lively environment, the ironical question now is how Singaporean is Chinatown?

Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

One day, in a farmhouse in France, a baby boy was born. "Such hands," his father said. "Perhaps he will be a man to match my father."

"But you have told me that your father was a giant," said his wife with a smile. "A head above two metres, and two hundred and fifty kilos?"

"Yes, I am the son of a giant," the father replied. "Why not the father of one as well?" 5

The boy grew and grew, reaching a height of 1.9 metres and a weight of more than 90 kilos when he entered his twelfth year. One day, as he was raking hay beside his father, a Rolls-Royce drove slowly past the field. "I will own such a car someday," the tall boy said quietly. 10

"Stop dreaming," his father replied. "That dream is too big even for you."

Two more summers passed and the boy's body as well as his dreams continued to grow. When he was 14, he left home to seek his fortune.

Five years went by. Then, one afternoon, his mother heard a knock. When she opened the door, she saw a giant of a man, all hands and feet, smiling enormously. She stood there dumbstruck. When her husband joined her at the door, the huge stranger asked, "May I ask how you like the car?" He stepped aside and with a slow sweep of his massive hand indicated a long, shining Rolls-Royce. 15

"It is beautiful, but what has that to do with us?" the husband said suspiciously. Then peering up into the stranger's twinkling eyes he exclaimed, "Andre! My son!" 20

During the five years young Andre had been separated from his parents, he had gone to Paris and been hired by a furniture-moving firm. When he turned 17, he was seen at a gym by several professional wrestlers. They showed him their moves and regaled him with tales of travel and adventure. When one was injured and a replacement was needed, Andre was asked to perform. He was, shall we say, a huge success. 25

As a professional wrestler, Andre Roussimoff, grew in stature, wealth and worldliness. In 1973, he arrived in New York City to meet Vince McMahon, professional wrestling's premier promoter. McMahon realised that the name Andre Roussimoff would do little in the United States to pull a crowd. Wrestling had always been filled with creative handles, ranging from Whiskers Savage to Abdullah the Butcher. But what name would produce the necessary excitement? McMahon correctly guessed that with the towering Frenchman, straightforward accuracy was best. Hence, he became known as Andre the Giant.

The Giant quickly became the draw McMahon predicted. Today, at the age of 35, he looms 2.2 metres and weighs approximately 230 kilos and appears all over the world. He stands astride professional wrestling—the largest, highest-paid performer in the game.

Wayne paced around thinking what to do next. "You are wearing out the carpet," Joey told his friend. "Just stay calm and we will figure out a solution." Wayne did not reply, deep in thought over the predicament they were in. He glanced at the clock on the wall. It had been an hour since their ordeal began and they had run out of options.

After several minutes of silence, Wayne finally spoke, "We've got to make a run for it with the loot. That's our only choice. We'll take two of them along with us." He waved his revolver at the group of people huddled at one corner of the room. There was a collective gasp from the people as they shuddered at what might happen to them next. Joey did not share Wayne's assessment. "Are you serious? The store is completely surrounded by the police. We do not stand a chance once we leave the store," he said, the fear all too evident in his voice. 5 10

Joey stood up slowly, wiping the sweat from his forehead. He glared at Wayne with a look of anxiety mixed with resentment. He knew he should not have gone along with his accomplice's plan. "I should never have listened to you. Look at the mess it has landed us in." Joey's fear had transformed into anger as he grabbed Wayne by the collar with one hand. Taken aback by the sudden aggression, Wayne pushed him away instinctively. Joey stumbled, lost his balance and fell backwards. There was a loud thud as his head hit the cashier's counter. As Joey's lifeless body slumped to the floor, the rifle he had been holding went off without warning. The trigger had inadvertently been pulled when he lost grip of it. 15 20

A few of the hostages screamed when the shot rang out. Wayne was momentarily stunned as the bullet had missed him only by a few inches and lodged itself in the wall behind him. Sensing that this was the opportunity he needed, Keong, the store assistant sprang to his feet and charged headlong into Wayne. The impact flung both men into the tables that had been stacked against the door by the gunmen. Wayne recovered more quickly and immediately threw a punch. Keong was hit squarely on the jaw and was knocked unconscious. 25

Emboldened by Keong's actions, the other hostages moved towards Wayne. Sensing this, Wayne scrambled for his revolver which lay just beside him. Having retrieved it, he pointed it at them and threatened, "Don't come any closer or you will get it." The hostages immediately froze, realising the consequence if they moved a step closer. 30

"Put that down!" a voice hollered behind Wayne. Shocked, he slowly turned round to see several officers pointing their weapons at him. He knew that the game was up. He had not noticed that the police had broken through the barricade during his struggle with Keong. 35
