Read the following passage carefully. Then write the answers for questions 26 to 34.

Alice's siblings, Jason and Cindy, were both outstanding students in their school's co-curricular activities. Jason excelled in chess while Cindy represented her school in gymnastics. Alice aspired to be like them.

Alice's music teacher, Mrs Tan, always said she was talented and praised her singing ability. Recently, something fascinating happened. Alice's father bought a recorder for her. She gave it a slight blow, expecting a squeak. Instead, a beautiful sound filled the air. She quickly searched online for videos of how to play the recorder. After a few tries, she managed to play a pleasant tune.

A thought struck Alice. "I might be good at music," she muttered to herself. "I must convince Mum to send me for music lessons."

That night, Alice announced at the dining table, "I want to take up music lessons."

Cindy was amused. She laughed as she did not think Alice would be interested for long since nobody in the family played any musical instrument either. Jason also felt that learning music was a waste of time and Alice would eventually give up. Determined to pursue her interest, Alice pleaded with her parents to let her take up music lessons. Her parents saw how eager she was and agreed to sign her up for music lessons. Alice's mother gave her full support, saying that as long as she was determined and diligent, she would succeed in no time. Alice squealed in delight when her mother signed her up for the music lessons.

Alice enjoyed attending the music lessons as her instructor was very patient in teaching her. She could even play the piano and guitar after attending the music lessons for just one term. Her siblings became her avid fans and enjoyed listening to her.
