Section C (8 m)Comprehension

Read the passage below and answer questions 17 to 23 based on the passage.

Under the midday sun, the orangutan looked like he was doing a rain dance with his arms stretched high towards the sky. Soon enough, the 'rain' did come, and he welcomed the cooling water with his mouth wide open. However, this shower was from a hose wielded by a zookeeper as a respite from the heat. 5

'Ice-based enrichment', or fruits and vegetables frozen in ice blocks, is also given to the animals to keep them mentally and physically engaged. Elephants use their trunks to drop these so that they would shatter into chunks of icy watermelon and carrots, making it easier for them to munch on the treats. Red river pigs bite into the ice blocks to get 10 to the honeydew slices.

Zookeepers carry out activities such as outdoor training in the earlier or later parts of the day when it is cooler. They also provide access to fresh water and shaded areas where the animals can sleep and rest. These areas are installed with fans to cool the animals down. 15

Orangutans have thick body coats while pigs and elephants do not have sweat glands, making them prone to overheating. Hence, zookeepers look out for signs of heat stress or a lack of appetite. They monitor these animals closely to ensure that they are coping well.

Section G (10 m)Comprehension Open

Read the passage below and answer questions 36 to 41.

Pumpernickel Mouse had eleven siblings who worked diligently to fill the bellies of the mice of Mouse Town with delicious fruit pies. Each morning, they baked and filled the shelves of their pie shop with buttery crusts:

However, Pumpernickel was not allowed to bake. When he tried, the filling would curdle, or the crust would burn. He would put salt instead of sugar, or hot peppers instead of cinnamon. So, he made himself useful by taking out the trash and scrubbing the dishes. 5

When a cheese shop opened in Mouse Town, fewer and fewer customers bought pies.

Pumpernickel wondered, "What if we sold something else as well?" 10
He decided to go to town. There, he met a travelling salesman.

"Hot Cocol!" the salesman said, tapping on an old recipe book. "Make this and your pie shop will be the talk of the town."

Pumpernickel had never heard of cocoa, but it seemed wonderful. He paid for an ingredient called cocoa powder and returned to his burrow. 15
He looked at the recipe but could not understand the instructions. Hot tears formed in his eyes.

"I found a new recipe, but I can't read it. I'm useless," Pumpernickel said as he showed it to his siblings.

They gasped. "You've found Grandfather's lost recipe!" they cried. 20
On the front cover, it read: BY PUMPERNICKEL MOUSE.

"We're sorry for treating you poorly. You might not be a good cook, but you've done something even better!" his brothers and sisters said.

The mice hugged Pumpernickel. Then, his siblings got to work. Soon the shelves were filled with chocolate cake, chocolate pudding, and even 25 chocolate pie.

The burrow was soon full of customers again. Sure, a fruit pie was occasionally sold. However, the most popular treat was the one called hot cocoa, which Pumpernickel was even allowed to stir.
