At this specific school, almost ninety percent of the students are in their seventies and eighties; catering for mature women who did not manage to receive or complete their education when they were younger. Their aim is to provide literacy and lifelong education to the educationally underprivileged. This is due to the fact that South Korea is among the world's fastest ageing societies, with almost twenty percent of their population aged 65 and above.

Unveiling the Tiny Troublemakers:

The Science Behind Head Lice Infestations

Written by Lilian Ong

What are head lice?

Head lice are parasites that attach themselves to human hair and feed on human blood. This is the most common kind of lice.

Female adult lice can lay up to six eggs every day. They lay and attach their eggs to hair close to the scalp. The eggs and their shell casings are called nits. Those that are less than six millimetres from the scalp are most likely to hatch.

The eggs take about a week to hatch, producing nymphs. The nymphs then go through three successive growth spurts. During these spurts, they moult (shed their outer layer) until they reach adult size.

Adult lice are about the size of a sesame seed and can be very hard to see because they can be any colour from white to tan to brown.

How do head lice spread?

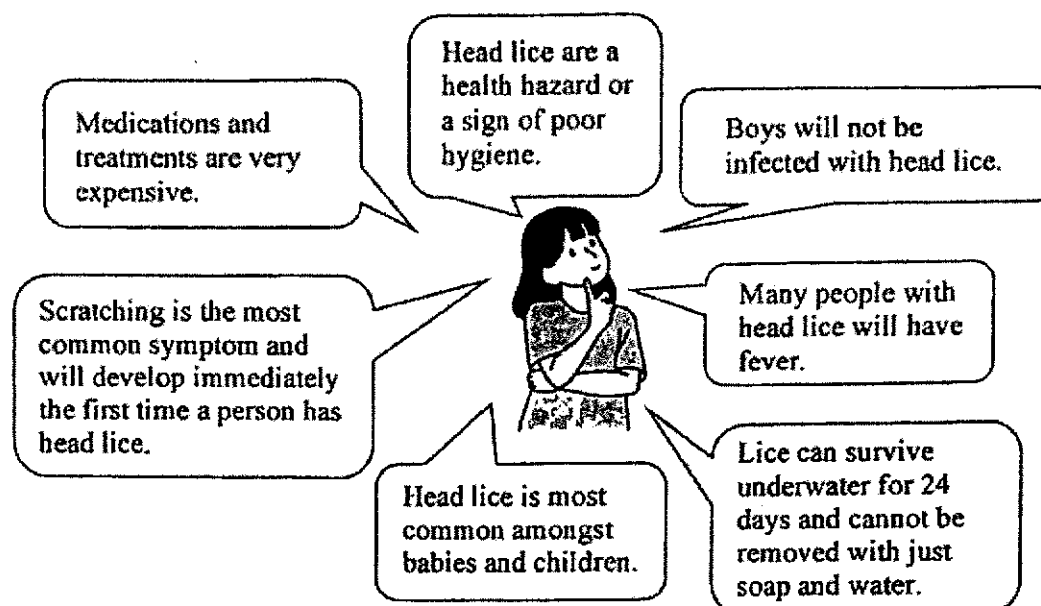

A common misconception is that head lice can jump, hop, or fly. They are crawling insects. There are only two ways head lice can spread from person to person. One is by direct head-to-head contact, as when children hug or put their heads together to look at the same book. The other way is by sharing hats, caps, hair ties, scarves, or personal items such as combs or brushes. Personal hygiene or cleanliness of the infested person's home or school has nothing to do with getting head lice.

What are the symptoms?

Four to six weeks following lice infestation, a person develops sensitivity to the saliva of head lice. This is when the scalp begins to feel itchy. The main areas of itching typically occur in the areas behind the ears or at the base of the neck. Itching triggered by head lice can persist for an extended period, even after the lice have been eliminated. There is no need to consult a doctor as the remedy is quite simple. However, when the infection fails to be resolved, it may be advisable to seek medical attention.

Myths of lice: Are they true?

How do I get rid of head lice?

The recommended treatment for head lice is the wet combing technique. When hair conditioner is applied, it temporarily immobilises the head lice for approximately 20 minutes. Comb through the smooth hair to eliminate lice from the scalp.

If you are experiencing intense itching and persistent scratching that disrupts your sleep, or if any sores appear on your scalp, you should consult a doctor.

Step 1: Apply a generous amount of hair conditioner. Leave it on for 20 minutes. Untangle the hair with a wide-toothed comb.

Step 2: Put the head lice comb flat against the scalp. Comb through each section of hair from the roots to the ends.

Step 3: Wipe the comb on tissue paper or paper towel after each stroke. Check for head lice and nits under bright light. Comb each section of hair at least 5 times.

Step 4: Wash your hair as per normal.

5 things you will need:

- hair conditioner
- a wide-toothed comb
- a fine-toothed head lice comb
- bright light
- tissue paper or paper towel

Check every 2 days and repeat the steps above until no lice is found for 10 consecutive days.

For each question from 21 to 28, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Make your choice (1, 2, 3 or 4) and shade your answer on the Optical Answer Sheet. (8 marks)

21 What does the word "Troublemakers" in the title refer to?

- (1) humans
- (2) head lice
- (3) parasites
- (4) infestations

22 This article is an extract from _____.

- (1) a daily newspaper
- (2) a medical journal on Head Lice
- (3) a magazine that advises parents on children
- (4) a school magazine for secondary school students

23 Based on the section "What are head lice?", which of the following is not true?

- (1) The nits are found on hair near the scalp.
- (2) The eggs take about seven days to hatch.
- (3) The nymphs shed their skin only once in their life.
- (4) The adult lice are difficult to spot because they are tiny.

24 Jason realises he has head lice. He most probably got it by _____.

- (1) having poor personal hygiene
- (2) wearing his dirty cap all the time
- (3) attending a school with poor cleanliness
- (4) being in close contact with an infected person

25 A person who has head lice would _____.

- (1) feel itchy only behind the ears
- (2) feel itchy right after an infection
- (3) start feeling itchy due to the saliva of lice
- (4) stop feeling itchy once the lice are removed

- 26 According to the article, which of the following statements is most likely true?
- (1) Head lice only move by jumping.
 - (2) One should see the doctor at the onset of an infection.
 - (3) Head lice will not cause an infected person to have fever.
 - (4) Expose one's hair to bright light in order to get rid of head lice.
- 27 Which of the following is not a reason hair conditioner is used during the treatment?
- (1) to kill the head lice
 - (2) to make the hair smoother
 - (3) to stop the head lice from moving
 - (4) to make it easier for the head lice to be removed
- 28 What is the main purpose of the article?
- (1) to uncover the myths of head lice
 - (2) to highlight the treatment for head lice
 - (3) to provide information about head lice
 - (4) to educate on the life cycle of head lice

Please note that the passage for Comprehension questions 71 to 80 in Booklet B is on the next page. You may now go on to Booklet B.

Refer to the passage below when you answer questions 71 to 80 in Booklet B.

Mike and Robert walked around aimlessly after school. Spotting a plump white chicken in a nearby alley, the twelve-year-old boys stared at it plucking at a discarded shirt that lay on a pile of garbage. As they did, an idea suddenly bubbled in Mike's mind. Nudging Robert, Mike grabbed a pillowcase from the ground and handed it to him, then told him to hold it open. Robert gave Mike a puzzled look but did as he was asked. As Mike approached the chicken, it moved slowly, a grave mistake, because Mike was quick. He grabbed it by its neck and held on tightly. The chicken desperately fluttered its wings, like a folding fan. When it finally calmed down, accepting its fate, Mike stuffed it into the pillowcase and sloppily tied the end.

When Robert asked what his intention was, Mike replied, "Sell it!" Mike had decided that he would sell that strutting piece of poultry to a neighbour down the block, Mr Omar, who had once kept chickens in his garden. Looking shocked, Robert shook his finger at Mike and called out as he left, "You are going to mess up!"

Mike felt uneasy at this pronouncement. Maybe this was not such a good idea, maybe it was wrong. With only a twinge of guilt, Mike hoisted his catch over his shoulder and headed home.

Mr Omar was in his front garden when Mike spotted him. "Mr Omar!" Mike shouted. "See what I have for you – a chicken." Mr Omar narrowed his right eye. A large man, with a temper to match, he was not someone to mess with. He would often yell at the neighbourhood kids, as he was not a big fan of theirs. All the children knew to keep out of his way. As Mike held open the bag, Mr Omar peeped in and offered him three dollars. Once the transaction was done, Mike ran home, trying not to think of the defenceless chicken looking up from inside the pillowcase.

Mike sat on his front porch, catching his breath, and recalling Robert's words. He had not cried for at least a year but now he felt his eyes growing moist. When the tears began to roll down his cheek, he let them fall. Yes, he had done a dreadful thing.

Later that evening, as he was washing up before dinner, he looked at himself in the mirror. He did not like what he saw there. He kept thinking about his actions and Robert's words. "I'll save you," Mike whispered before joining his parents for the evening meal.

After dinner, Mike cleaned up the kitchen before seeking permission to visit Robert, giving the excuse that he needed to borrow a book. As Mike made his way towards Mr Omar's house, he wondered if he could pull it off. Would he be found out? After all, Mr Omar was not someone to be trifled with.

Mike was breathing fast. Thinking of what he had planned to do, Mike lost the courage to continue. He turned and started running home. Within minutes, he was in front of his home, but he did not go inside. Reflecting on all that had taken place, he did not feel like a good person. He had sold a chicken he did not own and had not rightfully profited from it.

As he grew angry with himself, he started to breathe harder. "Why am I such a coward?" He turned around and once again, hurried to Mr Omar's house. Arriving there, he walked slowly into the garden. Then Mike heard a cluck, and then a scratching sound. Straining his eyes, he spotted the chicken. One of its legs was tied with plastic twine to the porch rail.

Dropping down to all fours, Mike crept towards the porch. When he reached the animal, the little chicken stood quietly, as if aware of the purpose of his visit. Mike struggled to untie the knot with his numb fingers, but the knot would not come loose. Desperate, Mike lowered his face to the ground and began to nibble. Finally, he cut through the twine. Once the chicken was free, he lifted it into his arms and duck-walked across the porch.

Running away from Mr Omar's house, Mike approached the alley, planning to leave the chicken there before going home. He was uncertain if he had done enough to redeem himself.
