Darren Tay, the 2016 World Toastmasters Champion, recounted what had happened at the competition the previous year. The Singaporean who was 27 years old then, was amazed that a myriad of outstanding speakers had gathered for the annual event in the USA.

(16)

Before his turn to speak, Darren tried to calm himself by taking in deep breaths.

(17)

When his name was called, he walked to the centre of the stage in his black suit, and then awkwardly put on a pair of white underwear. He looked silly! Darren anticipated that the audience would laugh as he stared at them!. Indeed, the audience burst into laughter and that boosted his morale. Darren began telling the story of how a bully had once forced him to wear a similar pair of underwear over his pants and walk around school. He shared how his teacher, Mr Chan, had helped him deal with the bully and how much he appreciated his teacher's efforts.

(18)

(19)

(20)

At the end of his speech, Darren took the underwear off and tossed it away to emphasise his message: the pair of underwear was a metaphor for shame. Victims of bullying do not have to live with shame.

SCIENCEART EXPLORAGANZA

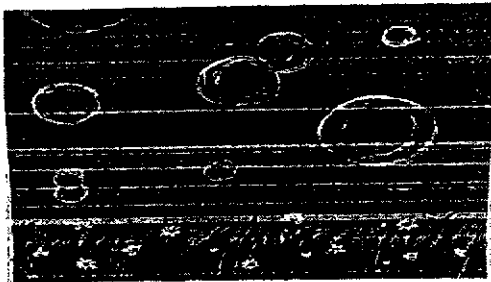

1 – 8 March 2024

Singapore ScienceArt Museum

Do you want to learn more about how art and science affect our lives?

All primary school students are welcome to join in our fun-filled activities this March.

You will explore and appreciate how art and science shape our world!

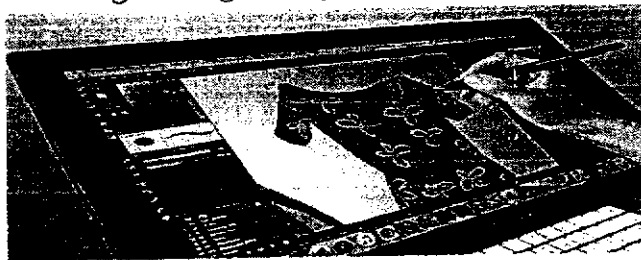

Soapy Art

1 – 5 March 2024

Venue: Sun Room, B1

Join us on an experimental workshop to explore how "bacteria and viruses" react with soap. While you are at it, create an amazing print which you can bring home!

The session will begin with an optional facilitated tour through the "Hope from Chaos: Pandemic Reflections" exhibition. After which, the workshop will include a demonstration on what soap does to germs. Lastly, create a print which reminds us to keep germs at bay by washing the right way.

Digital Art

3 – 6 March 2024

Venue: Techno Room, B1

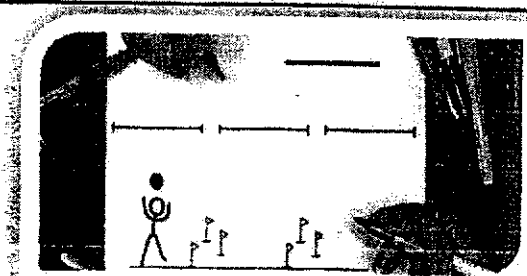

Venture into the world of art and technology this holiday at the ScienceArt Museum. A half day camp with an interactive workshop and immersive play awaits you!

At the workshop, participants will be introduced to the world of programming and learn more about coding! On top of that, participants can join a facilitated visit to the exhibition "Future World: Where Art Meets Science" and discover many different ways to engage with the digital artworks.

Ready, Get Set, Play!

6 – 8 March 2024

Venue: Rainbow Room, B2

Hop onto an adventure where you can draw and bring your ideas to life in this half-day camp themed around video games.

Participants must first join a facilitated tour through the “Virtual Kingdom: Videogames Transformed” exhibition. As they unlock the next level of this programme, participants will proceed to join a workshop where 2-Dimensional drawings on paper will be transformed into an actual game. Are you game enough to create a video game?

Planet or Plastic? Make Your Own Tut

1 – 8 March 2024

Venue: Horizon Room, B2

This is a hands-on workshop that encourages young visitors to create their own version of everybody's favourite sea turtle, Tut. They will get creative and explore ways to upcycle discarded materials by giving them a new life in this workshop.

- At the end of the workshop, participants will bring their turtle home with them and continue to spread the message of climate change.
- Workshop is complimentary and all materials will be provided. Limited slots are available.
- Online pre-booking of tickets is required. Follow the ScienceArt Museum Facebook page for more details!
- Suggested age group: 5 – 12 years old. For children aged between 5 – 8 years old, parents/guardians must accompany the child for the session.

Organised by Singapore ScienceArt Museum

Please note that the passage for Comprehension questions 71 to 80 is on the next page. You may now go on to Booklet B.

Refer to the passage below when you answer questions 71 to 80 in Booklet B.

It was silent and dark and the children were afraid. They huddled together, their backs facing the cliff. Far below them, a little stream flowed inland — soon to disappear within the immense Australian desert. Above them, the walls of the cliff climbed smoothly to a moonless sky.

The little boy moved more closely beside his sister, trembling. She felt blindly for his hand and held it very tightly. The tension he felt faded away slowly. When a boy is only eight, a big sister thirteen years old can be wonderfully comforting.

"Mary," Peter whispered, hand over his stomach and his eyes looking pleadingly at his sister. Mary sighed. She felt in the pocket of her dress and pulled out a paper-covered stick of barley sugar. It was their last one. She broke it, gave him half and slipped the other half back in her pocket, telling him to suck it instead of biting it. Then, Peter started to move about restlessly from one foot to another. Mary reached for his hand again and squeezed it, asking him if he was alright. "My leg's bleeding. I can feel a sharp pain," Peter groaned.

Mary bent down and refastened the bandage around his leg. They nestled together, holding hands and looking into the blackness of the Australian night. They could neither see nor hear anything, other than the stillness of the night. Later, there would be other sounds as the wilderness came to life. But now, an hour after sunset, the bushes were silent and frighteningly still. To the children, they were full of terrors unseen and unknown. It was a far cry here compared to their home back in the city.

The hours passed like slow, unhurrying snails. Peter gradually fell asleep soundly, but Mary could not. She recalled that she was in the aeroplane again and she knew that something was wrong. She and Peter were the only passengers there. She was looking at the engine of the plane. She knew that the flames would come soon. She bit her lips and her heart was pounding fast. Shortly, the red sparks spread out of the aeroplane's engine and she watched the flames in horror before her mind went blank. The next thing she knew was that she and Peter were staggering away from the blazing plane. She was pulling him frantically because one of his legs was numb and their feet kept sinking into the soft, yielding sand.

Mary breathlessly gasped for Peter to move quickly away from the flaming embers. She heard a thumping roar. Looking back, she saw the pilot and his co-pilot stumbling out of the wreckage. Then, the children saw both of them collapsing to the ground and they were motionless thereafter. Mary clutched her brother's hand tighter. Neither of them wanted to relive that experience again.

Soon, the night sky began to turn brighter and the unknown of the forest was lifted. At the horizon, the sunrise of a new day was upon them.
