Read the passage below and answer questions 6 to 15. (20 marks)

Jen pricked up her ears. She ~~thought~~ she had heard some giggles behind her. When she turned around, she saw Sally and Tina looking at her while trying to hide their smiles. Although slightly irritated, Jen ignored them ~~completely~~.

Mr. Sim had been talking about his students' aspirations and what their parents' jobs were. "My parents are professional athletes. They hope I will be like them but what I truly want to be is an actor!" Bill shared and gave a sigh.

When it was Jen's turn, Sally blurted, "Jen's father is a rubbish collector. It is a stinky job!" Sally then ~~made a face and pretended to faint on the spot. Everybody in the class~~ laughed loudly at her actions. Jen's face ~~turned red~~. She fought hard to hold back her tears. Mr. Sim, whose brows were furrowed and lips pursed thin, raised his voice for the class to be quiet. Almost immediately, only the whirring of the fans could be heard.

"All of you should be ashamed!" Mr. Sim said, "This is an extremely difficult but meaningful job. Can you imagine what it would be like without someone who clears the litter from the rubbish collection points where we live?"

Just then Mr. Sim caught Tina rolling her eyes and cast a long and hard stare at her. That was like a final warning that stopped anyone else from jeering again. "It's not funny," Mr. Sim said firmly, "All of you owe Jen an apology. Her father works extremely hard to keep the city clean."

Everyone in class apologised, but Jen felt that some were insincere.

When Jen arrived home, she ~~went to cry~~ in her room. Worried, Father ~~tried~~ to get her to talk but she was hesitant as she did not want to hurt his feelings. After a while, Jen grudgingly confided in him. She was taken aback by Father's unexpected response. He smiled widely and nodded.

Jen was puzzled. Father ~~explained~~, "The truth is, your classmates are absolutely right about how dirty my job is. Rubbish is filthy. Every day, I see litter everywhere and it can make one's head spin. However, my co-workers and I would clear this up. Jen, I like my job. I play a part in keeping this city clean. Many residents appreciate what I do and even stop to thank me personally."

To Jen's surprise, Father invited her to join him at work that Saturday to see what he really meant. However, she was in a dilemma. While she was excited to experience it, the thought of the stench put her off. On second thought, she decided to bear with the discomfort and not pass up the opportunity.

It was still dark when Father woke Jen up on Saturday morning. At the rubbish processing plant, many people were already at work. They were cheerfully going about their different tasks. This reminded Jen of Father's statement that he liked his job. When it was time to ride the rubbish truck, she whipped out a handkerchief, preparing to cover her nose with it. However, her worry was unfounded. There was hardly any foul smell.

The truck then stopped at a rubbish collection point. Jen and Father jumped off. Father started picking up big trash bags which weighed at least 100 kg and tossing them into the back of the truck. Watching Father hard at work, Jen was touched. "Let me help you with the smaller bags, Pa!" she volunteered. By noon, they had covered all the rubbish collection points on the assigned route.

Jen realised that clearing rubbish was hard work, but it was definitely a meaningful job. "I am proud of you, Pa! Without you, the city will not be clean!" she exclaimed, hugging Father.
