When we first brought Marley home, he was a tiny puppy with oversized paws and endless energy. He fitted into our hearts in the blink of an eye, becoming a part of our daily routines.

Every morning, Marley would wait by the door, his tail wagging back and forth, eager for his walk.

"Marley, you always know how to cheer me up," I said one morning as I put on his leash.

He looked up at me with his big eyes, as if he comprehended every word. Despite his mischievous (17) nature, Marley had a knack for finding the most comfortable spot in the house, usually our favourite couch. His playful antics and boundless enthusiasm brought both chaos and joy to our lives.

Marley was undeniably clumsy, often knocking over vases and scattering newspapers around the (19) house.

Yet, in the evenings, he would curl up beside us, breathing quietly, offering a sense of lasting companionship that words couldn't describe. Through all the ups and downs, Marley (20) remained by our side, teaching us about loyalty and love.

Text 2

The extract below is taken from an article on chocolate in a health magazine.

Chocolate is increasingly being promoted as a health-boosting superfood. While dark chocolate does contain compounds linked to health benefits, the overall effect of chocolate depends on various factors, including cocoa content, added ingredients and portion size. The truth is that most chocolate products contain high levels of sugar and fats, which reduce or even cancel out any potential health benefits.

Claims about the health benefits of chocolate often lead consumers to believe they should eat chocolate regularly. Unfortunately, those claims largely result from studies on pure cocoa, not the processed and sweetened forms of chocolate commonly found in retail stores. Marketing tactics also influence consumer perception. Some promotions sell the idea that consuming more chocolate leads to greater health benefits. These messages can mislead consumers.

For each question from 21 to 25, choose the best answer. Shade your answer (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet. (5 marks)

Please note that the passage for Comprehension questions 66 to 75 in Booklet B is on page 8-9. You may now go on to Booklet B.

Charlotte Wong, Victoria Primary School's chess 'grandmaster', had won so many competitions her trophies filled a cabinet in the school hall. However, she preferred playing chess online, where she could play without the pressure of her reputation, going by the nickname 'Chess Queen'. In particular, she relished the opportunities to spar with her online partner, 'Dragon Master', whose unique strategies always intrigued her.

That afternoon at the Chess Club, Mrs Lau, their teacher, introduced a new member. "Everyone, this is Rachel Chen. Charlotte, would you be her buddy?"

Charlotte nodded distractedly; her thoughts were on her unfinished online game with Dragon Master. However, as Rachel walked towards her, a pin on her school bag caught Charlotte's attention. It was gifted to all participants at the National Chess Championship last year. This new member seemed to have competition experience, unlike-the-regular new members. "Hi, buddy! Up for a game?" Charlotte asked, expecting to see the usual nervous hesitation of unskilled players. Instead, Rachel's eyes sparkled as she replied calmly, "That would be great." Charlotte thought she might have found a worthy opponent in Rachel.

15

Rachel's initial moves felt strangely familiar. As their game progressed, Rachel maintained a focused gaze on the chessboard and a relaxed posture, while Charlotte grew increasingly restless. She studied the board and planned her moves, knowing that one wrong move could prove fatal. She was biting her lip and tapping her foot under the table as she tightened her fingers around her queen. She made a decision and shifted her queen.

20

Without warning, Rachel whispered, "Checkmate in five moves." Charlotte's heart skipped a beat. It was the exact forewarning Dragon Master would type in their online chats. And Dragon Master was usually right.

Rachel then made an unexpected attack. Seeing the tricky move, Charlotte gave her opponent a small, genuine smile, then refocused on her game. Fortunately, she was able to counter it with a clever move of her own. Rachel locked eyes with the other and nodded approvingly. By the time they finished their game, Charlotte's mind was buzzing with questions about her mysterious new club member.

That night, Charlotte continued her online game with Dragon Master. However, her mind kept returning to Rachel's playstyle. She typed, "Made a new friend at the Chess Club today." Dragon Master replied, "That is what I love most about chess. The best wins in life don't just happen on the chessboard." Charlotte stared at those words. At her winning speech during last year's National Chess Championship, she had told all the participants that friendship mattered more than winning with that exact phrase. Suddenly, all the pieces fell into place.

30

At the next chess club session, Charlotte made it a point to observe Rachel's games at different tables. As suspected, Rachel started the game by moving her knights. It was Dragon Master's favourite opening move—the special knight move they had talked about so many times online. Charlotte was ready to confirm her suspicion.

35

"Would you like another game?" Charlotte asked.

"Of course! I see you have been busy and haven't played a single game," Rachel replied with a knowing smile.

40

Footnote

Queen and knights are chess pieces used in the game of chess.

Checkmale is a term players may say when they are about to win the game.

As they began to play, Rachel moved her pieces in that familiar pattern again. Charlotte felt her pulse jump with certainty. "Nice move, 'Dragon Master'," she said softly, just for Rachel to hear. Rachel's hand froze mid-move.

"Thank you, Charlotte... or should I say, 'Chess Queen'?" she chuckled. Charlotte widened her eyes in recognition before breaking into a beaming smile.

Many people underestimate the value of a good night's sleep hecti schedules and constant screen time, both children and adults often get too little rest. Slee not helps the body to heal but also allows the brain to process nev information. This is based on that have shown that students who are (48) well-rested tend to learn better in school than those who are of sleep.
Despite these benefits, many children still go to bed late. Using devices jus before bedtime can be especially to our sleep. The blue-light emitted from screens can with the body's ability to produce melatonin—a chemical that helps our bodies to asleep.
To sleep well, it's important to have a regular bedtime routine. This could include off devices at least an hour before bed, reading a book, or taking a warm (53) shower. Parents can encourage good habits from an age. Experts (54) recommend school-aged children get 9 to 11 hours of sleep every night. Lack of sleep can cause irritability, trouble focusing, and long-term health (55)
In some countries, schools start later in the morning to help students get rest. This change has led to better academic results and improved well-being. Sleep also the immune system, so children who sleep well are (57) less likely to fall ill. Doctors often advise patients to sleep more when recovering from sickness.
However, the of sleep is as important as its quantity. A person may (58) be in bed for eight hours still feel tired if his sleep is frequently (59) disrupted by noise, stress or discomfort. Having a calm sleeping environment helps. While many try to sleep more on weekends to make up lost rest, this does not (60) undo the negative impact of ongoing sleep loss. Consistency is key to developing healthy sleep habits.
