When Alfie appeared at James' stall, all the children were afraid because he could be rather gruff. They moved away ⁽⁷⁾ warily from the school bully. Alfie sniggered, "How would I know if your ⁽⁸⁾ cakes are scrumptious?"

James' shoulders slumped upon hearing Alfie's question. He pointed to the sample plate.

⁽⁹⁾ Alfie examined them and poked a few pieces of the samples. He grabbed a piece of the ⁽¹⁰⁾ cake and eyed it with suspicion. Without any warning, he picked up a piece and threw the cake at James' face. It bounced off James' nose and landed on the floor.

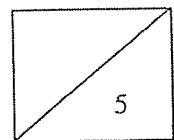

A ripple of laughter came from the crowd. Everyone pretended the cakes were disgusting ⁽¹¹⁾ and threw them on the floor. No one dared to take the risk of offending Alfie, afraid to be his next target.

"Stop your nonsense!" a little girl commanded in a loud voice.

Section E: Comprehension (Open-ended) (10 marks)

Read this passage and answer questions 21 to 26.

During World War 2, many children were moved from crowded cities like London to the countryside to keep them safe from bombings. Families in small towns would take them in and care for them. This text is about two boys, David and Tuck, who are waiting to be chosen.

From the stage, Miss Roberts spoke to the crowd of adults. She told them to choose a boy and register with Miss Evers at the table.
The crowd looked up at the children. They gazed back at them. There was a lot of whispering and it was a long time before anyone moved. A lady standing in the crowd stepped forward first and peered closely at the tag on Paul's shirt.	5
"Paul, let's go," Mrs Susan said. Paul looked at Miss Roberts for assurance. She nodded.
"She doesn't know what she is in for," Tuck whispered to David. Paul was known for being the most notorious boy in school.
Soon, all the boys except Tuck and David had left with their foster* parents. There was no one left. It was then David realised that there was a huge problem. He leaned closer to Tuck and asked if they would be sent home when they could not find anyone to look after them.	10
"Don't worry, Miss Roberts will see to it," Tuck replied hopefully.
"Mr Reynolds is two hours late," Miss Evers grumbled. She paced up and down before Miss Roberts.	15
"But even with Mr Reynolds, there still leaves one boy unaccounted for," Miss Roberts insisted.
The conversation between the two teachers dwindled to an inaudible whisper as they realised the boys might overhear them. The longer it went on, the more obvious it was that the situation was serious.	20
Suddenly, a bearded man strode into the hall, introduced himself as Mr Reynolds and apologised for coming late. Miss Evers urged him to choose between Tuck and David. He jokingly remarked it felt like going to the market. Miss Evers reprimanded him. She knew the matter was important to the boys. Tension built as Mr Reynolds frowned at the boys. It was either one of them.	25
As Tuck prayed, David mouthed, "Please." To everyone's surprise, he offered to take them both. He asked whether they were willing to go with him. Tuck and David looked at each other – each understood instinctively what the other wanted.
"We'll go with you," both boys replied at the same time.
