Section C: Comprehension (20 marks)

Read the passage below and answer questions 11 – 20.

“You know, a wolf that is misunderstood and turns out to be kind would make the story so much more interesting,” Ling said, folding her arms. Ravi frowned slightly, clearly unconvinced. He explained that changing the wolf’s dishonest nature would affect the entire moral of the story. “If we make the wolf sincere, the lesson becomes muddled.”	5
Around them, the classroom buzzed as students started on their group projects. Their teacher, Mrs Tan, had given the class an assignment: choose a traditional folk tale and adapt it into a short skit. Ravi, Ling and Tom had quickly agreed on ‘The Boy Who Cried Wolf’ and everyone had taken on a role — Ravi would write the script and narrate, Ling would play the main character and Tom offered to handle props and costumes. The group had always worked well together in the past. However, this project was proving to be unusually difficult and tension had begun to rise.	10
Ling thought the story was too predictable and proposed a plot twist: perhaps the wolf was lonely and wanted to make friends, but the villagers kept chasing it away. She believed that would add depth to the story, making it more interesting.	15
Confused, Ravi questioned, “Doesn’t it contradict the entire point of the story? Why would the villagers be angry at the boy if the wolf never posed a real threat? You have changed the message of the story — not to judge somebody too quickly. I say we keep to the original story!”	20
Tom shook his head and sighed, “We’re short on time and we haven’t even agreed on a single scene. The longer we argue, the less we get done.” He added that he could not start building the props until the group had finalised the ending.
The discussion came to a halt. Everyone sat in silence. Mrs Tan, noticing their unease, approached the table and asked if everything was okay. Each member took turns sharing their views. “Are you clear on the message you want your audience to take away?” Mrs Tan asked. The group knew they were not on the same page regarding that.	25
Mrs Tan continued, “That is the most important. A story can be told in many ways — what matters is how clearly your version conveys the lesson. If you’re trying something new, make sure the audience still understands what you’re trying to say,” she advised. She also reminded them to listen to one another’s ideas with an open mind and to build on one another’s strengths.	30
Ravi thought for a moment and then suggested a compromise. “What if the	35
